THE CRAVEN.

A PARODY.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

On one morning bright and cheery,
While I wandered faint and weary,
Over many a rolling patch
Upon the wet and muddy moor,
While I paused to load the shot gun—
For of game as yet I'd got none—
Suddenly I noticed "Shot" run.
Run and leap the rail fence o'er.
"I'm some starving cur," I muttered,
"For a bone that's leaping o'er,
For his ribs look thin and poor."

Ah! how well do I remember
Of the time—'twas in November—
And the place—'twas Switzer timber
And the rails the cars ran o'er;
Eagerly I wished the noontide,
Vainly I had roamed the hillside
And the wood in search of coon-hide,
Coon or hare I needed sore—
Hide or feathers for a trophy
I then stood in need of sore—
Nothing else I wanted more.

And the sparrows, hopping, flirting,
In the hedge the roadside skirting,
Thrilled me, filled me with desire
To lift the gun and pop them o'er;
So that now, to still the clamor
Of my heart, I eased the hammer,
Thinking 'I'd not charge and ram her
For those little birdies' gore.
See that hound how he's entreating
For those little birdies' gore;
I pop them!—he'll starve before!"

Presently I, feeling colder,
Raised the gun upon my shoulder,
Saying "Surely, cur or pointer,
There is game enough in store;
But the fact is I'm dejected,
And here Nimrod's art neglected,
Till with ague I'm affected;
But you scour the woods before
And this buck ague will leave me—"
Here we reached the woods before;
Trees and leaves and nothing more.

Deep into that forest steering,
Long I rambled, listening, peering;
Seeing nothing, nothing hearing
Save leaves, trees, dog and his roar;
Nothing fit a sight to take on
Did the smallest sound awaken,
But a piece of uncured bacon—
Properly so called, a boar—
Gave one squeal (the cur had wrung
An echo from a neighbor's boar);
Merely this, and nothing more.

Back unto the farm returning,
All my soul intensely yearning,
To behold again the face,
And hear the voice I most adore;
For the briefest separation
Wrought in me such desolation,
That the game of all creation,
Placed in range of my gun's bore,
Could not wholly fill her absence;
Great then was the grief I bore,
Having brought no prize to floor.

Open here the front gate flinging,
In I stepped, the hunter springing
To my side and closely clinging
Till we reached the cottage door;
Not the slightest fear betraying
Of a whelp her teeth displaying,
Not a moment e'en delaying,
In he bounced upon the floor—
In he bounced with unclean feet
That left their traces on the floor—
Bounced and sat, and nothing more.

Then the cur to mirth exciting,
And the company delighting
By the movement of his jaws
When at a scrap of food they tore,
"Though thou couldst devour a mution,
Thou," I said, "art sure no glutton,
Lively, fat, sdly canine butler,
Fond of feed as that thou hast four;
Herein art thou unlike butler,
He hath two feet, thou hast four;
But in this, and nothing more."

Much I marveled at the feeding
Of this dog of such fine breeding;
Though his neck, a collar needing,
No mark of an owner bore;
For we can not think together,
That a dog without a leather
Left to starve upon the heather
Seems than worthless little more—
If forsaken by his keeper,
Seems than worthless little more—
So seemed "Shot" crouched on the floor.

But the hunter, still reclining
At my feet while I was dining,
Kept a constant, subdued whining,
As some grant he would implore:
Then the dame it 'gan to fret her,
"Sir," I muttered, "desist actor,
By my troth! sir, thou hadst better
Hence, and save thy sides from gore;
Get thee back into the front yard,
Else thy sides the tongs may gore—"
Then he scampered through the door.

Startled at his late transmission,
And abrupt change of position,
Straight he essayed the commission
Of a trespass grave and sore—
Off he darted for the chickens,
Scattering them like "the dickens,"
But a shotgun's backward prickings
Forced h'm loud with pain to roar,
Then he came to me for comfort;
Still continuing to roar:
"Good!" said I, and nothing more.

But the hunter, still reclining
On the earth, and softly whining,
Straight I shifted to a coop
Whereon I sat the year before,
Taken upon the sake down a-sitting
I betook myself to knitting,
As I thought, a thing befitting
His rude neck all bare and hoar,
'Twas a band of sable beads
To grace his neck all bare and hoar,
Meant to soothe the grief he bore.

Thus I sat engaged in thinking—
While the dog lay idly winking—
And the sun kept slowly sinking;
Should it thus be evermore!
Must I always wear a mitten?
Could I not some method hit on,
Could no argument be written
Which might make her love outpour?
Which might melt her heart's sealed fountain,
And its love on me outpour?
Vain this hope, vain as of yore.

Then my footsteps slowly wending
Down the lane, the dog attending,
Soon appeared a horseman bending
On a steed all foamed o'er;
Sharply the keen spurs applying,
As if he did arrive at flying,
On he dashed till me espying
Straight he turned about before,
Wheeled he suddenly and halted
In my path a pace before;
Then the rascal cried—"Sir!—"

"Robber," thought I, without speaking—
"Robber!" (else how came he shrieking
So correctly, without seeking
First to learn what name I bore?)
But he, seemingly undaunted
By my silence, fiercely taunted
Me for having late enchanted
His straw dog, and then he swore
Oaths too horrible for me like
A dilemmanice he swore.
"Nay," said I, and nothing more.

Then to him thus:—"Hold! I pray, man,
You do err in what you say, man;
I not steal thy dog away, man!
Cease this scourging, I implore."
But he said—"If thou deniest,
And this accusation triest
To rebut, I'll vow thou liest!
I'll dismount and fix the score—
Aconitacally, if
You wish it, I'll adjust the score—
Thou dost lie! I vow once more."

"Be that word thy sign of learning!
Man or fiend," I thought, and turning
Quietly departed, burning
To dip my hands in his gore.
"Rather his nor seek to stay him,"
Urged my judgment, "for to slay him
Were thy only means to pay him
For the outrage, grave and sore—
Wouldst thy life else in a dungeon,
To redress this wrong though sore?"
Then my heart said, "Nevermore."

And the craven, never quitting,
Still is sliding, still is sliding
In my memory like a spoore
Viewed on the infernal shore;
And his accents, vile and stinging,
In my ears are ever ringing,
Most unwholesome rer'ses bringing,
At remembrance how he swore;
And the wood from my heart
That grew beneath the words he swore,
Shall be lifted—nevermore.

CHAPTER XXII.

MISS PYECROFT'S INVITATIONS.

Whenever a stranger appeared at Broadmead there was an immediate round of festivities. It made a pleasant change in the visiting circle.

To the stranger, however, it presented but a small form of variety—he guests at each party being the same, the form of entertainment the same, the very dishes on the table the same, for whatever novelty was introduced at the first party was followed suit to all the others.

The rooms, the photograph albums, and the pianos were the great differences to be noted. In olden times, the latter might have been described as bad, worse, worst, at the three visiting houses; but, of late years, there had been an impetus in a musical direction, which had somewhat improved the state of things.

Still, whether the amusement to be obtained were great or not, no one in Broadmead, excepting Jasper Beaton, ever thought of declining an invitation. There could be no prior engagement pleaded, society being too limited to allow of more than one reunion on the same evening.

Therefore, when invitations were sent out, it was with a moral certainty of their being accepted—Jasper Seaton alone giving the excitement of a doubt in the matter.

"I hope that Jasper Seaton will not decline," said Miss Pyecroft, as she sealed her last note; for Miss Pyecroft continued to seal her notes with the seal ring once belonging to her fath r, and which bore on its cornelian surface the arms of the family.

"There's not much fear," observed Miss Letty; "he's been going everywhere lately, since Di has visited. They are wonderfully good friends now; and she walks about with him as much as she used to do with Mr. Carteret."

"I should not be surprised if, after all, she marries Jasper," said Miss Sophia.

"Nor I," answered Letty; "unless she's only flirting."

"If she's a flirt, she's just as likely to marry one as the other," responded Miss Sophia.

"I hope Jasper will come," repeated Miss Pyecroft, taking no notice of her sister's remarks. "It will be rather awkward if there are no gentlemen to meet Captain Stanfield and his son."

"There will be Dr. Crawford," suggested Miss Sophia.

"As Captain Stanfield and his son are staying with the Crawfords, one can scarcely count Dr. Crawford," replied Miss Pyecroft. "It will put out all my plans if Jasper does not come; for I had calculated upon our being just ten—four from the rectory, three from the Manor House and our three selves. If, by any caprice of the moment, Jasper decides to remain at home, it will spoil the symmetry of the table."

"We have dined an odd number before," replied Miss Letty.

"But never without its having been a matter of extreme discomfort, not to say pain to me. Anything uneven or irregular jars upon the senses," returned Miss Pyecroft.

Then, after a pause, she continued:—

"It is a pity that Signor Neri is democratic in his tendencies. Had his exile—voluntary or involuntary, whichever it may be—been owing to a noble but unfortunate sympathy with those in authority, the ignobility—if I may use the word—of his present position might possibly be ignored; but I believe he was so misguided as to take part with the populace; and that, I fear, is too grave an error to be overlooked."

Miss Letty and Miss Sophia understood nothing of politics; but they had an infinite belief in Rebecca, and stood firmly by any political opinion that she enunciated.

Therefore Miss Letty observed that what Rebecca had said was very sensible; and it was, of course, a very wrong thing to stand by the populace, as naturally the populace would be wrong, and the authorities right; and that she was exceedingly surprised at Signor Neri's doing so ungentlemanlike a thing, as really there was something quite gentlemanlike about him.

"He was a gentleman," said Miss Pyecroft, regretfully.

Signor Neri had risen in her estimation during a visit he had paid in her sanctum, where his remarks upon the Pyecroft pedigree had tended to show her that the Signor had a good knowledge of genealogical matters.

"He was a gentleman," she reiterated; and she sighed, as though deploring that he had thrown away his prerogatives. "In a place like Broadmead—he Pyecrofts being people of mark—one must, of course, stand up to one's principles."

"Certainly," responded Miss Sophia, not exactly knowing what those principles might be.

"And there's been a saint in his family," said Miss Letty. "Di was telling me all about it. I don't know if it is the one that the flowers are always before."

"No; that is Saint—Saint—I forget the name," replied Miss Sophia. "Di could tell me. She thinks a great deal of the Neris, and says they have a right to hold their heads higher than any one here."

"If it had not been for the populace," pursued Miss Pyecroft, evidently wavering, which was a rare phase in her temperament. "I was so much pleased with Signor Neri's manner in his own house, that it occurred to me to ask him and his sis er in to coffee. I do not exactly know how it would do with strangers, or whether Dr. Crawford would quite like it for his guests; but if one could lose sight of the little political error, one might consider the position he holds in Broadmead as a sinecure, and so gloss over the difference between ourselves and him. Kings have been reduced to extremities," continued Miss Pyecroft, in argument with herself, "and may be again, for aught I know—for I fear that these are revolutionary times. King Charles, of sacred memory—took refuge in an oak—which, though a royal tree, was not one of dignity. Roger Pyecroft, if you remember," she said, suddenly turning upon Miss Sophia, "was one of his faithful adherents. The Pyecrofts have ever been true and loyal to the crown. Therefore the question is, can I or can I not invite one whose antecedents lead one to suppose that his principles are of a subversive nature? The only excuse that can be offered in favor of the matter still in a political light, and having had my views early formed from the good old leaders that I was in the habit of reading to dear papa, in the county paper, some forty or fifty years ago, and which I have consistently upheld to the present time—the only excuse for the Signor is, that no country being equal to our own; no monarch equal to our own; no legislature army, or navy, equal to our own—there may have been some ground for the part he took; and, at any rate, one may judge him more leniently than if he had been an Englishman."

When Miss Pyecroft came to making an excuse for any one, it was almost tantamount to a defence.

"I hope, therefore, that I should not be doing anything to endanger our glorious constitution if I should carry my press in design into execution. I trust it would not be a dangerous precedent."

"I don't think any one knows anything about the Signor excepting Di and ourselves," said Miss Letty, who liked having a gossip with the Signora, and with whom the Signora felt very much more at her ease than with Miss Pyecroft. "It would make quite a large party—twelve."

"Eleven, if Jasper did not come. But I could not invite Signor Neri unless Jasper comes; so it reduces it to nine again."

"Why not?"

"Because there must be one incontrovertible Broadmead gentleman to meet Captain Stanfield. It would be possible to invite Signor Neri under cover of Jasper's wing, but not otherwise."

"And Di sings twice as well when Signor Neri accompanies her."

"I have thought of that!"

"And perhaps he would bring his violin."

"I have thought of that also."

"You always think of everything, Rebecca."

"If I did not, I do not know what would become of Broadmead," said Miss Pyecroft, comp acently.

"But do you think the Signora would come?" asked Miss Sophia. "She never goes anywhere, and is so shy with every one except Diana."

"She is never invited anywhere. Besides, when I decide upon a thing, it is usually accomplished," responded Miss Pyecroft, autocratically.

And Miss Pyecroft retiring to her business room, Miss Sophia and Miss Letty a proceeded further to discuss the merits of their sister's scheme, and to await with anxiety the answer from the Manor House. Mrs. Seaton always sent a reply at once; therefore there was not much delay, as the distance between Brierly House and the Manor House was inconsiderable.

Mrs. Seaton's answer was favorable. Di would come, and Jasper would come.

"And there was just as much chance of Diana's declining as of Jasper's, if we had only thought of it," said Miss Sophia. "She's as full of whims as ever; and I really don't think she's been quite herself ever since Mr. Carteret went."

"She has been quieter" answered Miss Letty; "and she has been regularly to church."

"So has Jasper."

"Yes; I wo der why. I always supposed that he was an atheist. He did not come to church for years."

"Perhaps Di's example," said Miss Sophia.

Miss Letty looked thoughtful.

"I think, if I were a girl, I should prefer Mr. Carteret. There is something very kind and gentle about him."

At this crisis Miss Pyecroft, with her bonnet on, was seen walking down the garden path.

"Rebecca is going to invite Signor Neri and his sister. I wonder if she will come," exclaimed Miss Sophia.

"I am afraid not; she's too shy."

"I wonder what the Crawfords and Mrs. Seaton will think of it."

"They can't think anything wrong that Rebecca does."

"No."

And Miss Pyecroft proceeded on her mission.

Whether she would have succeeded in it if Diana had not been there, is doubtful; but Diana, having worked Jasper round to a better appreciation of the Neris, was at the present moment bent upon making every one else appreciate them also. Not that she set any value upon any one in Broadmead, but she had conceived the design of placing the Neris on what she deemed their proper footing in society.

"Which you won't do, Di," said Jasper, after having listened patiently to a long exordium in praise of her friends. "It isn't in the constituted nature of things."

"Then it ought to be."

"Liberty, equality, fraternity, Di," said Jasper, laughing. "You are a regular little red republican. You will get turned out of Broadmead society yourself, instead of advancing others in it."

"I shouldn't care if I was," she replied; "and I don't know what a red republican is. But I don't believe in equality and fraternity—at least, not in this world. What a terrible thing it would be!"

"And in the world to come?"

"Jasper, I am serious," she answered, reprovingly. "I don't know what to think about the world to come. That is one of my difficulties."

"What is?"

"The fraternity. Miss Pyecroft, Dr. Crawford, and all the people I don't like; I can't think I shall feel glad to see them there."

"Perhaps you won't."

"I really think that I could get to like positive sinners better. One cannot pity decided sinners, so that in time one's pity might grow into a sort of love. I hope it is not very wrong to feel as I do."

"I hope not," said Jasper, rather earnestly.

"Do you feel the same, Jasper?" asked Diana, again struck by some fancied parallel between herself and Jasper.

"Which set do you consider that I belong to, Di?" he asked, half seriously.

"Perhaps not entirely to either. Of course you are no better than I am; perhaps even not quite so good as I have been since I knew John Carteret—at least, I mean," she added, qualifyingly, "that you do not try to believe in as much as I do."

He laughed a little bitterly.

"But I know you are quite, quite honest; and that is a great deal!" she said, eagerly.

He started.

"Am I?"

"Yes. I have no belief in half the good people of Broadmead, and I have in you. I do not believe you would do anything mean or dishonorable. I know precisely how bad and how good you are."

The contracted expression came into Jasper's pale face, that flushed slightly as she spoke.

"Have I vexed you?" she asked. "I did not intend to do so; but I always put myself and you together as the outcasts of Broadmead religious respectability—always doing what we ought not to do, and leaving undone what we ought to do. And yet," she concluded, in a burst of illogical reasoning, "we are worse than any one else."

Jasper Seaton, in spite of the contending feelings within him, could not forbear smiling.

"You are not much of a reasoner, Di."

"Yet what I say is true. I always think that there is something untrue in a great deal of the reasoning that sounds very plausible."

Again something in her speech touched Jasper, for a quick shade of annoyance passed over his countenance.

"You are growing better, Jasper. I am quite sure that you are," she said, consolingly. "You have been so different since Madame de Mouline died. I think deaths makes us all better, in some way that I cannot explain. Madame de Mouline was very good. Perhaps she watches you now."

And Di looked dreamily into space, as though it needed but the touch of an invisible finger to rend the veil that kept the dead from sight.

Jasper turned away. There was something that evidently distressed him in the tone the conversation had taken. And Diana regretted having mentioned the name of his sister, of whom he had been very fond.

"Perhaps, if Anne had lived, I should have been better," he said, abruptly. "I think that her death has helped me much."

And he left Diana trying to recollect what she could have said that had so palpably disturbed Jasper—but to no avail.

There was certainly a change in Jasper. He had softened very much—his temper was more under control, and he had endeavored to smooth down the asperities of Mrs. Seaton, who had lately grown exceedingly irritable. He had even defended John Carteret in her constant attacks of him; but, somehow, his defence always broke down, and John Carteret always lost a little through his arguments. Still, Diana felt that he meant kindly, and though she knew that he regarded John Carteret's declining the settlement, and his offer to free Diana from her engagement, with suspicion, yet he had never said anything disagreeable to her upon the subject, his views being more shadowed forth than openly declared. Then, too, Jasper, if he pleased, could make himself very agreeable, even fascinating. Those who disliked him most did him this justice. Miss Pyecroft herself, though she was usually at war with him, had acknowledged on one or two occasions that Jasper Seaton could make himself as pleasant as any most people if he only chose, and that it was a great pity if he did not do so, for a man now popular he might make himself with very little trouble.

CHAPTER XXIII.

DIANA AND THE SIGNORA.

"Carissima, I cannot go."

"But you have accepted, Signorina."

"I tried with my full heart to say no, carissima; but that woman terrible did insist that she would not hear it. And Giuseppe, it is no more pleasure to him than to me."

"Ah! but what shall I do if you are not there? I shall have no pleasure then, and I have been dreaming all night of the party. If you do not go, I will not go either. I will go up now to Miss Pyecroft and tell her that we have all changed our minds."

Signor Neri smiled.

"That might be worse, Orsola," said he, turning to his sister, "for then would arrive your Miss Pyecroft terribile, and would what she call argrue the point, than which is nothing more fatal to a party."

"Of course she would, maestro; and she would stay for hours and hours, until she made you see that it was the most necessary thing in the world for you to go; and so you would go in the end, after having endured the long lecture, and, therefore, you may just as well go without having it. What are you going to wear, Signorina?" and she faced suddenly round upon her friend.

"I do not know."

And Signora glanced down at her long black dress.

"I wear but one kind," she said.

"Yes," replied Diana, "but you are not going to wear that this evening. You must open some of your old trunks, and bring out the treasures that are lying there."

Signora Neri shook her head.

"To please me," said Diana. "Every one that loves me pleases me. And there are not many, Signorina."

"I do, carina."

"And therefore I may go with you, and find the wonderful dress that is hidden under folds of soft paper; and you will let me be like the fairy godmother who made Cinderella all ready for the ball! Maestro, have I not your permission to make the Signorina do everything I wish her to do?"

The old man smiled.

"No one can withstand madamigella," he answe red; "she ever has her way."

"And I will sing my best to-night, though there will be no one to care for it but you and Jasper. And I will play the accompaniments to your violin to perfection: I can if I like. The inspiration will come into my fingers—it is there already, maestro—listen!" And she ran over a brilliant prelude on the piano. "Is not that good? I am in heart and tune to-day."

"Bravissima!—it is divina!" said Signor Neri, his eyes glisten ng.

"Yes, we will have a little concert to ourselves, maestro. We can pity ourselves into the seventh heaven, far above the stupid people at the party; and the Signorina will listen to us and we shall lend her part of our wings, so that she may mount up with us. There is a new life for music in me to-day. Listen again;" and, placing her hand on Signor Neri's shoulder, she burst forth:—

"Speed to your own sweet sky flight,
Child of a rebel o. virgin white,
Take no
Angels ever bright and fair,
Take, oh! take me to your care.'

"I shall sing that to-night, maestro."

But Signor Neri's eyes were dim with tears.

"The Lord is good," he said, "who has given me, far away from mine own Italy, to hear the voice of an angel."

"Maestro! maestro!" exclaimed Diana, holding up her finger, "you will make me so vain that I shall not know what to do. Isn't it very wrong, Signorina, when I am trying all the time so hard to be humble? But now," she said, drawing the Signora towards the door, "you will let me see that wonderful dress, will you not?"

The Signora suffered Diana to have her way.

"I remember the box well—it has large brass clasps and a funny old lock, and an oddly shaped key. Yes, that is it!" and Diana selected a key from the bunch Signora Neri produced.

"How delightful!" she continued, as she opened the box and caught sight of the folds of a black velvet dress. "Signorina, I believe that you have been putting it at the top, so that you may have no trouble about it this evening."

"Indeed—but, carissima," answered Signora Neri, earnestly, "it has been there always. But it is in too old a fashion."

"Not in the least. It is foreign—it will look distinguished. You could not have your dresses in the fashion of Miss Pyecroft or Mrs. Crawford. It would be entirely out of taste. Imagine yourself in Miss Pyecroft's house, and what would she say?"

And, overcome with the thought, Diana sank down laughing by the side of the huge trunk.

"I should look droll," answered the Signora.

"Yes, my maestro would scarcely know you. No, this dress is much more graceful, and this lace is exquisite. I shall put some round the throat myself. It is like Vandyke's lace. Signorina, you will look like a picture."

"It is from Venice," said Signora Neri, looking with slightly awakened interest into the the trunk. "So also the fan. Ah! and that bracelet—it is long since I did place it on my arm."

"It must go on to-night; and I shall try to find a red rose in the conservatory—or a camelia might do. You will be like a Florentine or a Venetian picture. I shall think you have walked into the room from some old Italian gallery."

And Diana rapidly set aside the things that struck her fancy.

"Not the fan, carissima—it is too cold to-day."

"Oh, that is not of the slightest consequence; the fan is in keeping with the costume."

"You do forget, carina, that I am an old woman."

"Quite, Signorina," replied Diana. "You have something that makes perpetual youth in you. It is only such people as Miss Pyecroft who grow old. It is the material world that batters us so terribly—the living so close down to the earth."

"Perhaps, if Anne had lived, I should have been better," he said, abruptly. "I think that her death has helped me much." And he left Diana trying to recollect what she could have said that had so palpably disturbed Jasper—but to no avail.

Take, oh! take me to your care.'

"I shall sing that to-night, maestro."

But Signor Neri's eyes were dim with tears.

"The Lord is good," he said, "who has given me, far away from mine own Italy, to hear the voice of an angel."

"Maestro! maestro!" exclaimed Diana, holding up her finger, "you will make me so vain that I shall not know what to do. Isn't it very wrong, Signorina, when I am trying all the time so hard to be humble? But now," she said, drawing the Signora towards the door, "you will let me see that wonderful dress, will you not?"

The Signora suffered Diana to have her way.

"I remember the box well—it has large brass clasps else—not even an old saddle or bridle. What a pity there are no fairies in the world!" said Diana, in abrupt conclusion.

"Why, carissima?" asked Signora Neri, in some surprise.

Diana laughed.

"I am foolish to-day, Signorina, but I am so happy. I don t know why, but it seems as though some joy secret was coming whispered through the earth; and that, if the birds, and trees and waters could only speak, they would tell me what it was—as though Persephone," she added, thinking of the tapestry in her lost Paradise, "were trying to send some message to the upper world. Some more thread, Signorina, if you please," said Diana, descending from her flight. "This lace looks lovely on the velvet, and this piece will do for the sleeves—if I may cut it?"

"As you please."

"You are a charming Signorina. Mrs. Seaton won't have old lace cut if she can help it, so it always goes on her dresses in the same way. I should get quite tired of it. There, all is ready now. I wish I could come and help you to dress; but Bessy is very neat-handed. No—you must wear the bracelet."

But Signora Neri dexterously obtained possession of it and clasped it round Diana's wrist.

"There," she said, "the bracelet shall be seen at Miss Pyecroft's, but it must be on axother arm."

"Oh! Signorina, it is too beautiful." And Diana gazed admirably on the exquisite workmanship displayed in the finely wrought gold.

"Not so—it pleases me to see it on thy arm, carina mia; and it will please Giuseppe also."

Signora Neri watched Diana as she tripped down the garden path, and out into the lane, where she met with Jasper Seaton, who had just been across the rectory fields, shooting.

Diana was evidently scolding him for his hard-hearted expedition, and he was laughingly defending himself.

There was a glow upon his pale features that gave an unusual animation to them, and caused Signora Neri to observe to her brother:—

"Mr. Seaton is handsome—almost, Giuseppe."

"To-day, quite," answered Signor Neri.

"I wonder how it will be," murmured the Signora, "The child has yet a child's heart."

"No," replied Signor Neri; "not so, Orsola. The divine depths of her voice tell me that her soul has come to her. She is no longer a child."

"But, Giuseppe, voices are divine that belong to children. I remember one angel chorister who was but a child—how sweet, how heavenly his voice! Do you remember, Giuseppe?"

"I remember, Orsola; but it was as the voice of cherubim and seraphim, not of a soul born to the earth, that must be pierced with the sorrow of the mas er—that apprehends that flutters up to heaven, yet feels of earth, that knows its humanity, and is struggling up to God. I could have wept, Orsola, at her tones to-day. He that lives in music, as I do, can tell these intonations, even as the sounds of various instruments; he can detect the untuned string, the false tone and the true. To the keen ear of the musician is there no deception. Her life is come, and every breath of outer life speaks of it unto her. And more, Orsola—the magician that weaves the web whose warp is sunlight, and whose woof the tissue of the rainbow, has placed this seal upon her heart, and locked therein a treasure that half guides her voice."

He spoke rapidly in his own language; and his sister, still following out her own meditations, asked:—

"Then will it be Mr. Carteret?"

"Orsola!—who else?" returned the old man.

"Mr. Seaton is kind, is handsome, is rich——"

"Orsola!" And the old man's voice spoke reproachfully.

"Giuseppe!"

"The child is an angel."

"Ah! Giuseppe—she is also a woman;" and Signora Neri sighed, and her fingers moved over her rosary.

Perchance, as she told her beads, she thought of Diana and John Carteret.

THE POCKET LETTER WRITER.

MODERN STYLE.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

APPLICATION BY AN AMATEUR FOR AN ENGAGEMENT.

SIR.—Perceiving by the papers that your principal tragedian has lately left you, I lose no time in presenting myself to fill the position thus made vacant. I have hitherto refrained from appearing before the public as a professional performer, owing to the prejudice against that class of persons, and the degradation such a step would cast upon my blood, which is he best in the country. But a sincere regard for the interests of the dramatic art induces me to conquer these considerations, and I now propose to give you the preference and make my first appearance in your theatre. I shall require opportunity for the rendition of "Macbeth," "Othello" and "Hamlet," immediately after the signing of my engagement. You must furnish the necessary dresses and properties. I shall also stipulate that I never be asked to act any villainous part, or in fact, any part whatever that may not exactly suit me. As assurance of ability I may, perhaps, add that I have appeared twice in parlor theatricals—once as D'Artagnan, and once as the Waiter in "Foodles."

Yours, &c.

REPLY OF THE MANAGER.

SIR.—Your generous offer overpowers me. To my misfortune it comes too late. I should have preferred above everything else an actor in my company with Blood in him and who came from a Family. But it was not to be. My evil luck, as usual, interposed. Next season possibly—though I can hardly hope you will wait—may be able to obtain the boon of your services in the meantime, if you would allow me, I should recommend a close study of our Divine art—especially of your role of the Waiter in "Foodles."

Yours, &c.,

A PLAIN, LUCID LETTER OF THANKS.

DEAR SIR.—I must thank you for your kindness in sending me so soon the recipe asked for. I shall reciprocate if you ask a favor of me. Ask me anything I can do; but I should prefer you to ask me something I can't do. I do not recognize your name. It is strange I have never seen it in the proceedings of Congress. I never read them, but it is certainly strange.

At any rate you may depend I will go into the oil and varnish business. If so, I shall buy all my varnish of you. Of course, I never use any; but I will get that much anyhow whether I get more or not.

Regarding the other matter spoken of, it is difficult to say. Perhaps; and yet it may not be. I certainly think so, although it is my opinion that it is not. That is, understand me, to speak plainly. Good bye.

LETTER OF INTRODUCTION.

GENTLEMEN.—The gentleman who will hand you this, Mr. Blathersknife, comes to New York for the purpose of obtaining goods. He has obtained a good many here lately, carrying them away under his coat. For personal description, see Rogue's Gallery; and for references, apply to the police. I advise you not to allow him to examine anything in your stock of ironware, except perhaps your improved style of handcuffs. &c., &c.

CARD OF INVITATION.

Miss Miller desires the pleasure of Mr. Wilkins' company on the evening of the 23d. He will please remember to avoid wearing that shabby hat he has stuck to so persistently for the last three years, and also to wipe his feet on the hall mat before entering the parlor.

MR. WILKINS' REPLY.

Mr. Lyttle Wilkins is happy to accept Miss Miller's kind invitation. He would beg to remind her that he wants something to eat this time at supper, and that he cannot be expected to gallop around the entire evening and get only one water cracker and a napkin.

LETTER OF CONDOLENCE.

DEAR FRIEND.—So that good old man has gone at last. Another angel has joined the bright host somewhere in the other world—perhaps to become the most shining and brilliant among them. As I saw his body in the coffin, so cold and chill, I thought how the soul was not cold, not chill! It was a proud sight to look at that form—so long accustomed to wearing mourning, and dances with expultation to behold that funeral and reflect whose it was. All who stood by felt glad. Believe me, that good old man will be missed. Yes the poor's ill miss him—the beggars who haunt this great city. In his life often did I see him raise them from their wretched places of resort and given them in charge of the kind police. In his heart felt even for the beast; once when he saw a wretch pounding his patient horse he stepped up manfully and bought that animal. The man was drunk, and though the horse did not belong to him, but to his employers, our deceased friend persuaded him into the bargain and secured the ill treated beast. The man ran away with the money. That horse (his day I am proud to add, draws his thirty-seven cartloads of stone an hour. It is his gratitude.

Our deceased old friend will be missed in his family. It will not be so lively in that home circle now. The children will not chase each other about the house now, nor be chased. The wife will not hear that well known voice from morning till night. All will be still and at peace; the boot jack will rest in its place, the shovel will rest by the fire.

My pen falters at the task of speaking of the virtues of our deceased old friend. He was convivial—who more so? Indeed it would have been impossible for any one to be more so. He was quick in looking after a wrong. In fact if he heard of anything wrong he would be on it like a duck on a June bug. He was impulsive character. And he was frugal and unostentatious. So frugal was he that you could not have found his equal. Yet the debts he has left behind him sufficiently attest that he was not niggardly.

If I can't write let us not judge them. It would be no task for any pen but that of the ungenerous enemy. Yet even by him a statement could not be fully made. I know it. Yours truly,

W. F. M.

OUR PORTRAIT GALLERY.

SOPHIA REMMELSBURG.

The graceful and accomplished danseuse who bears the above appellation while per orming her professional duties, is re ally Miss Fredericka Sophie Remmelsburg Von Rodman Dorf, the third daughter of Frederick Reinmerburg, the eighth Baron Von Rodmansdorf, of Austria. His estates, which were un-ntailed and in direct vassalage to the crown, had become exhausted by the prodigality of the successive holders and the exorbitant demands made upon them during the various wars of Austria. At the latter's death his family found themselves burdened with an insumbe ed estate which no longer afforded an adequate income for their livelihood. Under these circumstances the eldest daughter, in a spirit of self reliance and independence, which did her credit, resolved to adopt the profession of a danseuse, in order to provide for the support and education of her younger sister, Miss Sophie, the subject of this sketch. We regret, for a future occasion, on account of her coming, simple name having been changed, that she eventually achieved success, and coming to New York city under an engagement to Messrs. Jarrett and Palmer, of Niblo's Garden, Miss Sophie accompanied her and made her début on the stage of that theatre in the winter of 1867 in the "Black Crook," where she at once won the favor of the audiences. She has a remarkably pretty face, a most symmetrical form, and personally dances with her entire little amending the male characters. She was born in 1854, and consequently is seventeen years of age. She is highly educated, accomplished, and affable to all with whom she comes in contact. With her sister, she has appeared at other theatres in New York city, Detroit, Boston, and Baltimore, Md., and as well as could are these artistes with America that they have decided to remain here, and will make the latter city, where they are much respected, their home.

To Correspondents.

G. H. S.—On the 4th of April, 1863, upon Heenan's return to England, he, Macdonald Sayers met at Owen Swift's, Tom, who was somewhat inebriated, asked Mace if he would make a match with him (Sayers), to which Jim replied that he would fight him or any other man, and £10 a side was then posted. Swift, however, expostulated and induced Sayers to ask a draw, to which Mace consented. Upon another occasion, while returning from a race meeting, £5 or £10 a side was staked for a match between them, which was to be made into £50 a side at Tattersall's, but Sayers paid forfeit. Mace challenged Heenan and Sayers on April 15th of that year.

T. GREEN.—1. Your subscription expires with No. 7, Vol. 19. 2. Sayers and Aaron Jones fought 62 rounds in 2 hours, on Jan. 6, 1857, when, after putting an end to the battle, when both men were much punished. They fought again, for a like stake and a bet of $200 a side, Feb. 12, 1857, Sayers winning after fighting 85 rounds in 3 hours.

STRANGER.—The first steamship which crossed the Atlantic was the "Savannah," from New York to Savannah, Ga., and thence to Liverpool direct, in 1819. The first western steamship passages were made by the Illinois and Great Western, both arriving at this port on April 23d, 1838.

ADAM, J., St. Pittsfield, Mass.—1. We guess that you are correct in your guess. 2. Since the Canadian land was ceded to Great Britain it was erected into a Dominion; what was known as Canada West is now called Ontario, and Canada East is styled the province of Quebec.

DRAMATICUS, Atlanta, Ga.—1. The verses are somewhat out of date, and their publication now would not create the same interest as if printed at the time of the lady's decease. 2. We hope you may succeed, but the entertainment will have to possess novelty as well as merit if it is to succeed this way.

G. F. E., Palmyra, N. Y.—Is having made the two points he gave, was therefore not set back; consequently, having but one to go, his high pegs blew out first. The points at which pitch are not fixed, but will differ the question of set back is determined, when they are taken in their regular order, as at all fours.

E. D. G., Indianapolis.—1. A game of casino consists properly of one deal. No one point takes precedence of another at casino. 3. The score is not counted until the cards are played out. 3. Lotta is not married. 4. Yes. 5. Yes, providing neither king nor rook have been moved.

JOHNSON.—1. Jimmy Massey kept a hostelrie in the Bowery, near Houston street, at the time of the Heenan and Sayers fight. 2. No; Heenan was seconded by Aaron Jones and Johnny Mackey, in his fight with Morrissey.

D. F. exam.—Your note, enclosing the circular of a contemporary, received; we have been placed in possession of many others by our advertising all of whom, like yourself, "destine wasting money on a paper which has no influence in the professions."

JERRY.—The dealer cannot play it alone when his partner assists. 2. The player that takes up, orders up or makes the trump is the only one that can play a lone hand. 3. Two lone hands cannot be played at one time.

READER, New York.—A and C having passed out, cannot come in again, and B takes the money. The fact of his having bet a chip did not expose the game, for the other players, who were really out of the game as they passed.

S. E. J., Titusville, Pa.—Heenan and Sayers fought on April 17th, 1860. 2. Cannot undertake to decide. In making such an agreement it should have been expressly stated how much the ace was to count.

FRANK MCM., Cambridge.—Yes, if it is shown that the error was clearly a misinterpretation of the rules and not a mere error of judgment.

SOUTHERN, Memphis.—Three miles have been walked in 22:18 2-5 by Stockwell; four miles in 31:22, by J. Miles; ten miles in 1:34:51¾, by Howes; twelve miles in 1:53, by G. Davison.

HARDWOOD, Natick, Mass.—1. Chambers stands 5 ft. 8¼ in., and can fight at 114 lbs. 2. Send on some money as a deposit if you desire a match.

R. M. G., Washington.—1. Coburn was born at Middletown, Co. Armagh, Ireland. 2. The match between Mace and Coburn was made on the 5th of December last.

P. MULLER.—Yes; Mace received that crushing blow in the nineteenth round and he came up for two more rounds, the battle occupying 21 in all.

F. D., New York.—Dutchman never attempted to trot twenty miles in one hour. Lady Fulton, Trustee, John Stewart and Capt. McGowan have accomplished the feat.

WOODBINE, Albany.—B's card, having been exposed while the dealer was helping him, gives him no choice in the matter, and he cannot accept the card, but must take it and one dealt him.

F. C., Washington.—Always welcome. 2. The gentleman is a resident of Massachusetts, and only connected with the CLIPPER as a contributor.

CHARLIE, Chicago.—C was the loser. D's high, he not having been set back, and A's low, putting each of them out before the point for C's Jack could be taken.

Y. B. C., Des Moines, Iowa.—1. Joe Coburn fought thrice only—with Price, McCoole and Gribbin. 2. No. 3. No. 4. No count in case of a tie.

F. F., Cairo Ill.—"At cribbage the cards were played as follows—C 7, J 6, 5 8, 9 7. C claimed a sequence of three for his 8 and J the same for his 7. Were both right?" Yes.

M. E. G., Peabody, Mass.—O'Baldwin beat Marsden, and Ilea was beaten by the former and fought a draw with Joe Wormald, or, rather, the police put a stop to it at the end of the first round.

EM. L., Evansville, Ind.—The Amateur Association has all it means. The Secretary is J. M. Thuhoff, 145 McElderry's Wharf, Bal imore. The Treasurer is A. Thacher, of the Olympic Club of Philadelphia.

H. F., Cumming, Ga.—Yes, Bell, Hall, Hallahan, Bennett, Leonard, Berthrong and H. Wright would do; but this could be improved upon, no doubt.

LEWEY, Duluth.—"The blind being $1 the next player cannot object to a straddle, which is always double the amount of the blind. Cut, Ace, Deuce, Trey, Quatre, Cinque, Pe.—Foc. Table music sent to Charles H. Dixon & Co., 711 Broadway. 2. We have no correspondent in Newcastle.

J. R., Boston, Mass.—1. The date of the former question to which you refer is too remote for us to remember. 2. The late census returns give Syracuse, N. Y., a population of 43,051.

B. H., Worcester, Mass.—Cannot give the exact date. It was just previous to Morrissey's departure for England to witness the Heenan-Sayers fight, however.

WASHINGTON.—The starboard side is the usual custom, but there is no invariable rule; the rowlocks being placed to suit the habit of the stroke oarsman.

YANKEE DOODLE YANKEE.—1. The rule says that all bets must be paid as the battle-money is awarded; consequently if the fight proves a draw the bet is a draw also. 2. McE does not lose his money.

CONSTANT READER, Meadville, Pa.—Yes; enclose 10 cents and postage stamps.

J. F. DE W.—Received, and will be used as soon as space will permit.

FRANK B.—Items always acceptable, but the locality is not of sufficient magnitude to warrant the appointment of a "regular."

R. F. E., Jr., Philadelphia.—The party who makes the trump is the only one that may play a lone hand, consequently B couldn't.

CUSHING, Elizabeth.—The best standing jump on record is 13 ft. 8½ in., and C. Peirce.

NED H.—It is not composed with the proper care to ensure publication.

A. P.—Wm. Lang ran a mile, partly down hill, at Newmarket, Eng., in 4:02.

A. A. D.—4, having failed to beat three 4's, loses the bet. In such a case a tie is not a stand off.

J. C., Monaghan, Mass.—B was entitled to three points—two for fifteen and one for last card.

EUCHRE, Cincinnati, O.—A, the dealer, could not play it alone after his partner had assisted.

J. J., 178 1st, St. Joseph, Mo.—Poem received, and will shortly appear.

G. ROGERS, Newark.—1. Hyer and Sullivan fought in February, 1849; Morrissey and Sullivan, Oct. 12, 1853. 2. No.

J. L. K., Boston.—Send to Nick Jansen, whose advertisement appears elsewhere, for "Physical Exercise" price $2.

M. C.—1. Mike McCoole was born at Ballabuhy, county Donegal, Ireland. 2. It was so reported at the time.

GEO. DANCEY, St. Paul.—The N. Y. paper is credited with the larger circulation.

TRENTON.—Thank you. We should be pleased to receive reports of the matches.

JOHN BULL, Philadelphia.—1. There is a clause referring to the subject in the treaty. 2. Apply to the British consul.

E., KANSAS.—The firm has always dealt honorably with us, which is all we know about them.

F. H., Fort Wayne, Ind.—Seymour's majority over Grant in this state in 1868 was 9,064.

VESTAL, East Saginaw, Mich.—They are not for sale at retail in this city.

WM. H.—Joe Coburn beat Mike McCool for $2,000 and the championship of America, May 5th, 1863.

ALEXANDER.—1. Heenan and Sayers fought on April 17th, 1860. 2. See answer to "Wm. H."

PETER.—Mace defeated Tom Allen near New Orleans, La., May 10th, 1870.

D. G., Providence, R. I.—Coburn fought a draw with Ned Price and defeated Gribbon after 6 rounds.—Ed.

MUZZER.—In jumping, the ground actually cleared must be measured, viz.:—From toe to heel.

UNCLE GEORGE, Phila.—1. No. 2. Jack Grant was Hammer Lane's last opponent.

WM. F. R., Williamsburgh.—A notice of the organization appeared in our columns some time ago.

RICHARD, New Orleans.—We will look it over as soon as we can spare the time.

COAL HEDGE.—The Reds did not lose a game in 1869. They defeated the Mutuals in that year by 4 to 2.

NED R., Memphis, Tenn.—Thanks. Write so that your letters will reach here on Saturdays.

INQUIRER, Steubenville, O.—Johnny Booker is still living, but we cannot give you his present whereabouts.

HEYMAN, Philadelphia, Pa.—You had better stick to your business and not take up all idea of the stage.

J. J., Providence, R. I.—1. Not that we are aware of. 2. Maggie Mitchell was born in New York city. 3. No.

H. H., South Bend, Ind.—1. There is no record thereof. 2. Don't know the party alluded to.

RIVERSIDE.—Certainly not. He can be ruled out as interfering with the field side.

L. H., Boston.—Olympic, Haymaker, Mutual, Athletic, Chicago, Kekiongs and the two Forest City clubs.

A READER.—1. The former has not entered. The latter two have. 2. No.

W. S. M., Portland.—1. Cannot say. 2. See answer to "R. E. J." 3. In clings. 4. Pot leaf.

F. F. B., Savannah.—Send to Peck and Snyder's, 126 Nassau street, for Amateur Convention Book.

J. D., Manhattan, Kans.—The score not being counted until the hand is played out, the game is a tie.

WOLFE AND WHITEHORN, Owaloosa, Ia.—The shooter cannot score the bird killed, but must be allowed another bird.

NELLY F., Philadelphia.—We believe he fought several times in England, but his fights are not recorded.

H. AND C., Chicago.—McCoole did not knock Aaron Jones down in every round.

J. M., Boston.—1. Commence with 7 lbs. 2. Sufficiently long not to cause fatigue. 3. Yes. 4. Nobody.

C. H. FLEISCH, Baltimore.—Thanks for additional old play bills.

M. & S., Sing Sing, N. Y.—New York city is called the Empire City.

J. H. L., Minot, Mich.—You send fresh and reliable items.

J. RUDKIN, Philadelphia.—Thank you; will make use of it.

WILLIAM.—1. No, but they did in 1870. 2. About $1,000,000.

CONSTANT READER.—We are not acquainted with his record.

C. C.—We can find no record of the great mare Belle Reese.

F. L., Galveston, Texas.—Too late to be of interest now.

THOS. A. DRESDEN.—We did not pay any attention to it.

YORKE BROS., Toronto, Ont.—See last week's CLIPPER.

JAMES HARDY.—Received, and will be given soon.

SAMBRIA, Youngstown, O.—Respectfully declined.

BOSTON.—Write to Peck & Snyder, who advertise.

F. M. G.—White flannel suit, with blue stockings.

JOE L. H., Philadelphia.—Respectfully declined.

SPECTATOR.—Heenan and Sayers fought once only.

J. R. B., Chicago.—It is not up to the standard.

M. H., Boston.—The subject is out of our line.

EM. CORBETT.—The letters have been mailed.

CARAT.—We have a correspondent there.

ED. SOUTHERN.—Can't say. 2. Yes.

J. W. C., Chicago.—Accepted.

C. and J. Irwin.—George Wright.

JOHN.—The letter has been sent.

CHEAP LIVING.—In Calhoun County, Florida, it is said, they feed hogs on cooked fish. "Our Jim," to whom we related this singular fact, says it must be a cheap place to live, and he thinks of trying it; he also wonders whether the fish are already cooked when caught, as that would make life still easier. Jim is rather lazy.

MESSRS. PECK & SNYDER, the well known and enterprising firm, of 126 Nassau street, this city, are prepared to furnish base ball goods of every description, and clubs requiring outfits are referred to their advertisement in another column.

FRED PILLOW, of Memphis, has been washed away by the current of the Mississippi. Not being properly fed during the trip, Fred Pillow sank into the bed of the river.

THE CHAMPIONSHIP.

The next issue of the NEW YORK CLIPPER will contain an official report of the match for the Prize Ring Championship between Jem Mace and Joe. Coburn, including a history of the men, how the match was brought about, selecting the ground, incidents by the way, and other matters of interest. In addition to the proceedings connected with the match, the CLIPPER will contain a large engraving representing the Prize Ring, with the two exponents of the science of manual defence sparring for an opening; together with the seconds, trainers, advisers, etc., in their appropriate places. Newsdealers will please take notice and send in their orders as early as may be convenient. A large extra edition will be printed to meet the increased orders already received.

CARD.

As an extraordinarily large edition of next week's NEW YORK CLIPPER will be printed to meet the increased orders now pouring in upon our agents in every section of the country, advertisers will find it to their interest to send along their favors as early as possible, and have them appear in our next issue, which will circulate largely in all parts of the world.

NIGHT INTO DAY.

What a golden glow rests upon all the objects of our daily intercourse and observation during the brilliant mornings of spring! How completely everything, even the most insignificant of objects, is transmuted into gold by the meridonal rays! Everything "smiles," from the tumbledown rookery which presented so forbidding an aspect under the influence of wintry storms, to the impecunious votary of Bacchus, hastening to slake his thirst at the nearest bar. Even the slums brighten up and present a tidy appearance, and only the dwellers in those elegant edifices that line the avenues are insensible to the magic influence. To those blase beings excitement brings fatigue, and they court repose, but although there the streets are deserted, the lower thoroughfares are seething with activity. On Broadway are swarms of spruce, well dressed people whom one sees every day for years in their accustomed lounging places, none of whom would be accused of having dissipated the previous midnight hours. Then the swarms of dames and damsels, high-stepping beauties, florid with health and with not a trace of languor visible about them, who would suspect them of having in any way abused the set order of things in nature? We glance up at the chaste, demure looking buildings on either side, so redolent of the airs of commercial propriety, and never suspect that revelry and wassail are the deities within. But now comes night, and a magical change invests the lately decorous scene. Lights blaze and the sounds of musical accord and the rattling of billiard cues are heard in every direction. Then it is that the town lounger looms up in his true importance, and it is found that instead of an idler, he is, perhaps, one of the most industrious bees—after his own fashion—in the whole human hive. Turning down a narrow, secluded street, we ascend an old fashioned stoop and enter a spacious double room, once the parlor in which the richest of our city magnates and the fairest of city belles displayed their airs and graces; where, perhaps, the marriage festival was celebrated and the coffin taken from its trestles to the hearse in bygone time. The apartment is filled as of old, in point of numbers, but this time with a very different throng. At sundry tables over their ale or spirits, numbers of men of middle age, with sundry youths remarkable for the greater attention paid to their dress, are discussing the prospects of the coming races, and names of favorites are heard again, and many an anecdote recounted by the seniors in which the names of old time jockeys are heard to mingle. There are men who were dandies and bucks of the road in the days when Flora Temple and Lady Suffolk monopolized the attention of the racing fraternity, who are posted in the history of trotting from the days of imported Dutchman and Messenger. Listen and you will hear reminiscences of the time when Hiram kept the forgotten Harlem Course, and Jack Harrison and George Spicer were famous as riders and "sporis" the whole town over; although then the population fell short of three hundred thousand, and no one looked to see Yorkville and Bloomingdale swallowed up by the fast striding city within a lifetime. The Beacon and Pioneer courses are overgrown with houses, but the Janeways and others still enliven the social circles of the city, and men who have made Geor[illegible] other side of McComb's dam, their stopping place, yet talk with a knowing wink of the "large bass" which they used to catch there. One hears, too, of forthcoming matches at base ball and cricket. Not a stone's throw from this you may meet the best pugilists of the day and hear the forthcoming Mace and Coburn match discussed in all its bearings. Yonder street is the nucleus of several private clubs, where many familiar faces turn up to the gaze of him who has the entree, and where, when the theatres are closed, you will meet the leading celebrities of the hour—authors, actors, editors, play-wright's, artists, dilletanti, medical students, by many of whom the pasteboards are kept in motion and the waiters busy until "daylight breaks in the morning." With balls and concerts and theatres, and a hundred places of minor resort scarce worth the mention, the stranger soon learns that the number of those who "turn night into day," and thrive by the operation, constitutes a fair proportion of the inhabitants, but ceases to wonder when, after the novelty has worn away, he finds himself acclimated to the custom, and, perhaps, as gay a "Parisian" as the rest.

A NEW "IRISH-AMERICAN" SONG.—We cheerfully give place to the following communication, and shall be pleased to learn of the complete success of our friend's composition. As he evidently disagrees with our idea of the nationality of a work, we propose to "divide the honors," and call the new song an "Irish-American" production:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CLIPPER.—SIR.—Although a newspaper reporter of seventeen years standing, I am somewhat timid in having in my name appear in the columns of a paper so ably conducted as Mr. Kit Clarke acknowledges his error in relation to the incidents which gave rise to Moore's beautiful song concerning Miss Curran and Robert Emmet, induces me once more to trouble you. I believe Mr. Clarke when he says the story was told him by an Englishman in England, and I never doubted him, because England has deprived Ireland of enough, and why should not one of her sons lay claim to the property of the dead? While upon this subject I must maybe parnished to express my astonishment at having lately heard that the Editor of THE CLIPPER had decided that although "The Last Rose of Summer" was written by an Irishman, yet, having been originally composed in some English song, it was not Irish. The words written in English makes it such, then undoubtedly it is English, but Ireland claims it as hers. Let me give you a case in point. When I was subpoened on the examination of Col. Wm. B. Roberts before U. S. Commissioner Betts, on a charge of sending an expedition to Canada, I gave testimony in such a manner (though strictly true) as showed my countrymen that I could not be made an informer. On that evening one of the poorer class of my countrymen, while congratulating me on the manner in which I acquitted myself, said:—"Ah, sir, shure an' I'm willin' to die for my country as any sir, no matther at it be Canada or any lither place; but (raising his eyes reverently to heaven) O Jasus I'm me life where I was born!" Beautiful did I think that sentiment, that, on reaching my home, I threw it into verse and immediately set the words to music. I am informed that Mr. Monroe Dempster, the tenor of Bryant's Minstrels, will sing this song in a week or two in public. Now a portion of the chorus is actually in the Irish language, yet by the same rule you are said to have given, it is an American song, because written in America. I shall never see Ireland again, and I feel sure, Sir, that whether the song is sung or not, the memory of my youth had been wasted in the 69th regiment of British infantry, but be this son, bad or good, I claim it to be as much an Irish song as I am an Irishman. Respectfully, JOHN MAHON.

A COUPLE OF ROUENS tried to make a disturbance on one of our passenger railway cars a few days ago, but the conductor suddenly pounced upon them, and, before they could realize their position, he threw them over the rear of the platform into the street. That man may be set down as a lightning conductor.

MUCH WOUNDED.—We are told that a Prussian lieutenant received thirty-three wounds, and still lives. Perhaps he was wounded, like our minstrel friends, by codfish balls.

THE TURF.

TROTTING MATCH AT SAN FRANCISCO.—The great match between W. Hendrickson's bay gelding, James D. McMann (formerly called Shoo Fly) and Oscar Lewis' bay gelding, Dexter, for $1,000, mile heats, three in five, in harness, came off over the Agricultural Park, San Francisco, on the 22d ult. Hendrickson's horse had been matched for $2,000 against Harvest Queen, but the latter paying forfeit, the former was then matched against Dexter, and the fact that both horses were entered for a $5,000 purse free for all gave additional interest to their present meeting. McMann was the favorite at $100 to $80. Dexter won the first heat, and made a dead heat of the second, the favorite's gameness enabling him to win the third, fourth and fifth heats and race. Time, 2:34½; 2:35¾; 2:36¼; 2:36. No time taken in the first heat.

SALE OF MAMBRINO BERTIE.—Mr. Robert Bonner has purchased of Dr. Herr, of Lexington, Ky., his three year old colt, Mambrino Bertie, for a price which has not transpired. This colt last fall trotted as a two year old over the Cincinnati track, in harness, three heats, with an interval of twenty minutes between them; the first of a mile in 2:42½, repeating the next mile in 2:44¼, and the third trial of two miles in 5:39½, making the first mile in 2:41; and the second in 2:48¼. He is a dark brown colt, without white, and was sired by Dr. Herr's Mambrino Patchen (an own brother to Lady Thorn) out of a mare by Mambrino Chief; he height he stands full 15 hands 2 inches.

SKIFF RACE.—On April 29th a four-oared skiff race came off at Hamilton, C. W., between employees of rival sewing machine factories for $50 a side. The names of the oarsmen were:—Wilson and Bowman crew—W. Webster (stroke), Mr. Cline, D. Clarke, R. Lister, A. Massie (coxswain). Gardner crew—A. McDonald (stroke), T. McBeth, J. Provan, A. Gray, Quinn (coxswain). The race was a good one, notwithstanding the water was rough. The representatives of the Wilson and Bowman establishment won the race in 23m. 30s. The course was not measured

MIDSHIPMEN VS. ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE.—A three mile race came off at Annapolis, Md., on May 8th, between six-oared crews composed respectively of "middies" from the Naval Academy and students of St. John's College. Although it was raining very hard there was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen. Time of the midshipmen, 20 min. 12 sec.; time of the St. John's, 21 min. When in the middle of the Severn river the St. John's boat broke an oar.

WITHDRAWN.—No one having had the courage to take up the gauntlet thrown down by John Shea, of Boston, on behalf of J. J. O'Leary, we have forwarded to his address, as directed, the fifty dollars which accompanied the challenge. This silence reflects

PEDESTRIANISM.

CHAMPIONSHIP 600 YARDS RACE.

Though the day was exceedingly unfavorable, fully 1,200 spectators gathered at the Royal Oak Park Grounds, Manchester, Eng., on April 19th, to witness the race of 600 yards for £75 and the championship challenge cup, the contestants being Jabez Nuttall, G. Walsh and H. Whitehead, each of whom has gained great celebrity as a pedestrian. Whitehall was installed in the position of first favorite, 5 to 4 being his price, 6 to 4 being taken with avidity about Walsh, and as high as 20 to 1 was laid against Nuttall. Immediately before the race, however, the betting underwent an important change, the quotation being 5 to 4 against Walsh, 7 to 4 against Whitehead, and 2 and 3 to 1 against Nuttall. Nuttall was elected to the course by Sish Albiston and Jack Sheaner, of Glasgow, Walsh by A. Greenwood and A. Howarth, and Whitehead by Bill Lang and a friend. The course, owing to the rain, was rather heavy going, but all that could be done to make it perfect was done by the spirited proprietor. The men having tossed for choice of position, Nuttall elected to run close to the rails, Walsh taking the centre position, and Whitehead had the outside place. But a short time elapsed after the toss when the three men, with their attendants, came on the course, and all three seemed to be in high condition, particularly Nuttall, who looked as if he was fit to run for a kingdom. Mr. J. H. Cooper having taken up his position as starter, but no time in firing the pistol, when the competitors bounded away on their journey at a tolerably quick pace. Walsh going immediately to the front, with Nuttall second and Whitehead last. They had scarcely traversed a third of the distance before Whitehead showed symptoms of distress, and at the chimney turn he was fully 50 yards in the rear of Nuttall, who was close in Walsh's track; indeed, at this point the race seemed to lie between Walsh and Nuttall, offers of 2 to 1 being laid against Whitehead. Coming down the Newton Heath side of the course Nuttall drew closer to Walsh, and rounding the turn for home he was all but level with the Royton man. Twenty yards further the two were running shoulder to shoulder and in this manner they ran for 50 yards. About 40 yards from the tape Nuttall was slightly in front, and although Walsh appeared to do all he could to again get the lead, Nuttall kept in front, and ultimately won an exciting finish by five yards, Whitehead ceasing to run when he was half way down the straight. The time was 1min. 16⅘sec. Mr. J. Cooper (the proprietor) was referee. Nuttall was vociferously cheered on leaving the course and Walsh seemed completely done up when he passed the referee.

PROFESSIONAL VS. AMATEUR.—The match between Jas. Smith, champion walker, and a well-known amateur of this city, the former to walk three-quarters of a mile while the latter runs a mile, is to take place on the Fashion Course at 5:30 P. M. on May 18th. The stakes are $300 a side, and the last $100 is to go up on May 10th.

THE RING.

THE BIG FIGHT FOR MAY 11th.

FINAL PREPARATIONS FOR THE ENCOUNTER.

DEATH OF COBURN'S WIFE.

The crisis is at hand, and ere this article be perused by readers at a distance the day which has been so long looked forward to with so much anxiety by thousands of persons in America and Great Britain will have come and gone, and the pending fistic combat between Joe Coburn and Jim Mace be an affair of the past, unless something now unforeseen should arise to interfere with present arrangements. As we go to press, the interest of the sporting world, as likewise of circles which seldom manifest any concern in such matters, is absorbed by the affair, and those who purpose being present at what promises to be the most important combat which ever occurred on this continent are making preparations to leave for the several points of rendezvous—Erie, Pa., Buffalo, Detroit, and Cleveland. In order to be on hand in season to take the steamers chartered for the conveyance of spectators to the ground, it will be requisite for New Yorkers to leave the city not later than the morning of Tuesday, 9th inst., and those residing in other cities will take notice and govern themselves accordingly. Coburn left the metropolis for Buffalo on the evening of May 3d, in company with Frank McIntyre and Billy McManus, arriving at his destination on the following day. He had made arrangements to locate in the vicinity of that city and complete his training, but while calmly supposed he received a telegram from Gabe Case, announcing the death of his wife very suddenly. He at once arose from the table, having but a few minutes in which to catch the train, and hurriedly stating the affliction which had befallen him, he left the hotel, and proceeding to the depot, took the next train back to New York. He reached this city on the 4th, and immediately repaired to the house of mourning, where his wife was ordered by a number of physicians to remain. Mrs. Coburn had been subject to violent convulsions, in one of which she died on the afternoon of the 4th, as stated, and the blow was a sad one to Joe. During the day James Cusick, on behalf of Mace, sent word to the effect that, if desired, he was willing to have the fight postponed any reasonable period in view of the sorrowful event which had occurred, the message being accompanied by kindly assurances of sympathy with him in his bereavement. The balance of the day was allowed Joe for consideration, and it was generally believed that the date would be altered, but Coburn concluded to the contrary and stated that he did not desire any postponement, as he wished all his troubles to be ended together. He was influenced mainly in thus resolving by a desire to ensure his friends against loss, they having invested heavily on the fight taking place on the day named in the articles. The unsolicited offer, however, did great credit to the hearts of Mace and his representative, showing that they did not desire to take an unmanly advantage of Joe in his funeral look place, on Saturday, at 3 o'clock P. M., from the residence of the uncle of deceased, Portsoth street and Second avenue, and was attended by quite a large concourse of the friends of the family, including a number of prominent sporting men. In one carriage was Ned O'Baldwin, Johnny Dwyer, John Charles (of Baltimore) and Frank Burns. The remains were interred at Calvary Cemetery. On Saturday night of Sunday Coburn again left for Buffalo. The wear and tear of railroad travel and the necessity of leaving off training has, of course, operated disadvantageously to him, but not to an extent, we think, which it will be impossible to recover from before the day of fighting. Mace has remained at his quarters, Cypress Hill Grove, L. I., all the week, and by his careful work, has secured splendid condition. He is to leave by the Erie road for the place of starting on the morning of Tuesday, 9th inst., in company with Cusick, Pooley and others. There is every reason to believe that there will be large delegations go from this city, Philadelphia, Boston, Buffalo, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Rochester and other points, and the battle will undoubtedly be witnessed by one of the largest assemblages of spectators that ever gathered at the ring side in this country. Persons in this city and vicinity who desire to go can obtain excursion tickets upon application to Ed. James, 58 and 60 Centre street, and the latest hour at which they can leave the foot of Chambers street, so as to reach the point of departure for the ground in season, is 7 o'clock P. M. on Tuesday, May 9th, though, to ensure against accidental delays on the road, it is advisable to leave earlier. All has gone on favorably so far, and everything indicates that the contest will be a most stubborn one, as well as the most scientific which has ever taken place here, and as both men are in A 1 fix, each ought to be able to endure a protracted struggle. The CLIPPER will be represented by a special reporter on the ground, who will furnish a full, impartial and reliable account of the conflict and incidents connected therewith, which will be laid before our readers next week. Those who desire to obtain a report free from the glaring inaccuracies always contained in the garbled accounts by "fresh" scribes for the daily press, will make a note on't.

HARRY HILL has effected a two weeks engagement with the celebrated French Wrestlers, Mons. Oreste and Mons. Leclerc, who will appear nightly in their display of muscular skill, in conjunction with the balance of the troupe which delights the patrons of Harry's festive Varieties.

SCRAP ON STATEN ISLAND.—We learn that a scrapping match for $25 a side took place at Silver Lake, S. I., on May 7th, between Ed. Clark and Oscar Tway, the former winning in 29 minutes, after fighting 7 rounds. C. H. Ashton was referee. Clark was waited upon by Jas. Corcoran and Tway by Ed. Leonard.

GEORGE ROOKE has withdrawn the fifty dollars he deposited with us some weeks since to make a match for the middle-weight championship, being tired of waiting for some one to take up his challenge. He says claim to the title, and will be ready to make a match at the weight mentioned at any time.

DENNIS E., better known as "Dennis" Dinneria, a Boston sparrer, left that port for Ireland recently, on board the Cunard steamer Parthia, for the benefit of his health.

RAY MULLINS was announced to take a farewell benefit at Jemmy Welsh's, London, on May 1st, prior to his departure for America.

DEATH OF JOHN WEBB.—This once celebrated English light-weight died at Liverpool on April 19th, after a protracted illness.

GEORGE ROOKE is announced to take a benefit at the Arbor, 40 West Houston street, on Monday evening, May 22d.

WE HAVE LETTERS for Jim Mace, Jim Cusick, Arthur Chambers and James Shaw.

RABIT BREEDING is being extensively carried on in Canada, it seems. In London there is a warren of five acres, surrounded by a board fence ten feet high, and containing at present two thousand rabbits. The cost of feeding and caring for these is 25c. apiece annually, and the net profits from the whole warren $3,000 a year. The annual increase is an average brood of 26 to each pair.

THE VIENNA SKATING CLUB recently presented a beautiful silver fountain, 16 inches high, to Mr. Jackson Haines the American artist, at present residing at Berlin, Prussia.

A NEW lacrosse club, styled the Quebec, was organized at the ancient Canada capital lately. J. D. Armstrong is field captain, and it numbers among its members most of the old Stadacona.

—Mr. Carbonnell, an exposer of spiritualism in Charleston, Mass., proposes to allow himself to be handcuffed and sewed up in a large bag and thrown into the river, when, as is claimed, he will come up with the bag on his arm, still whole, and not a stitch cut or disturbed, and the handcuffs in his hand.

Mr. Walter Montgomery

Mr. Walter Montgomery
Mr. Walter Montgomery
AS
MARK ANTONY,
AT THE
BOSTON THEATRE.

OPINIONS OF THE BOSTON PRESS.

The Boston Gazette, April 26th, 1871.

Mr. Montgomery's Mark Antony was without doubt the best single conception in the play and the familiar speech over the dead body of Cæsar was a triumph of elocutionary and histrionic art.

The Boston Sunday Courier, April 30th, 1871.

The grand success of the representation was Mr. Montgomery's Mark Antony. Whether in the moments of friendly fealty in the earlier scenes with Cæsar, of banished grief in the Senate Chamber after the fall of Cæsar, or in the great scene in the forum, over the dead body of his beloved commander, he was alike, so faithful to the obloquy of the partisans in Cæsar's assassination. His closing soliloquy in this scene was grand in its sustained power and intense elocution; his superb elocution never failing, in his most rapid and earnest utterances, to give full effect and distinct enunciation to every word spoken.

Mr. Montgomery was honored with a double call after this act, and was enthusiastically applauded at different points throughout the performance.

Boston Sunday Herald, April 30, 1871.

If Mr. Montgomery received the lion's share of the recognition it was not only tributary to his splendid portraiture of Mark Antony but expressive on the part of many of their esteem for him in the social walks of life, where, we fancy, "none knew him but to love him."

Boston Times, April 30, 1871.

In this performance there was, indeed, a rare Antony, probably the best ever seen upon the Boston stage, in Walter Montgomery. His superb impersonation was, it is observed, the theme of unanimous applause. The closing performances of the combination were "Romeo and Juliet" on Saturday afternoon, with Mr. Walter Montgomery as Romeo, and "Julius Cæsar," the most popular piece of the week has been that of "Julius Cæsar," partly because it presented the four actors in one cast, and chiefly, we imagine, on account of the brilliant success of Mr. Montgomery as Antony, which has created the greatest sensation of any performance which has been given for a long while.

Boston Post, April 28th, 1871.

No small share of the satisfaction of the enterprise—for it is an enterprise to play this exacting tragedy—arises from the efforts of Mr. Walter Montgomery. Drilled in every detail, as he evidently have had an opportunity to witness something of this gentleman's talents, but to nothing has he shown so absolutely superior and grand as in his impersonation of Marc Antony. We doubt if the history of the drama in our city records a better. At all events it has called forth the most enthusiastic applause, and from those who are wont to sit at public places in marked quietude. We have not within memory to recall such a spirited outpouring of plaudits as has paid tribute to this embodiment of Mr. Montgomery. At once one of the grandest of Shakespeare's characters, this interpretation of it by Mr. Montgomery is remarkable for power, intensity and dramatic insight. While we would not detract from the splendid talent by which he was surrounded, it is only just to state of Mr. Montgomery's Antony that it was the finest performance by all odds of the combination; and those who have had the privilege of seeing it, or who may witness it to-night, will remember the same with positive delight and gratitude. All honor to the actor who realizes to his audience such creations.

Boston Daily Advertiser, April 27th, 1871.

The great scene of the evening, however, was reserved for Mr. Montgomery, whose Mark Antony was characterized by the unvarying taste and nice intelligence which distinguish all the dramatic efforts of this gentleman, and which rose in the great address to the citizens over the body of Cæsar to the highest point of skill and insight as well as to a lofty height of earnestness and intensity.

Boston Journal, April 27th, 1871.

Mr. Montgomery carried off the chief honors by his very fine rendering of the role of Mark Antony, and the several times called before the curtain. It was one of the best if not the very best impersonation of Antony given here.

New York Clipper, May 6th.

The great feature of the performance, however, was Walter Montgomery's splendid setting as Antony, which is one of the finest things he has done in Boston. His delivery of the famous speech over Cæsar's body was full of power, and it roused the pit and once to such a pitch that they insisted upon his coming out and bowing his acknowledgments.

Boston Evening Transcript, April 27th, 1871.

His strongest feature was the Mark Antony of Mr. Montgomery, which was a vigorous, studied, intelligent and nicely shaded performance throughout, and which, perhaps, was, on the whole, the best representation of the part ever witnessed in this city. He delivered his touching oration with great discrimination, and his speech over the dead body of Cæsar was a masterpiece of declamation, a subtle oratorical effort, which was worthy of all commendation. That same speech, in the way in which it was delivered, reading and could only emanate from the master mind of Shakespeare. We must take exceptions to Mr. Montgomery's dress, and especially to that worn in the first act. Admitting, for the sake of argument, that it was early morning, the costume was more theatrical than Roman, and would not have been a bad make-up for the Apollo Belvidere—yet it is unnecessary to be so extremely realistic. The audience was large, enthusiastic and intelligent. We cannot refrain, however, from protesting against the outrage on propriety which was committed in calling for Mr. Montgomery in the middle of an act. Mr. Montgomery, too, should be reprehended for answering such a violation of good taste.

Boston Morning Transcript, April 27th, 1871.

Montgomery's Mark Antony is rarely excelled for pathetic, impassioned utterance. Portions of it were perfect in elocution. It is the best Shakespearian character for him in which he has appeared since his arrival here. He was heartily received and called before the curtain twice in the middle of an act.

This distinguished actor will play an engagement at the Boston Museum, commencing Monday, May 8th, and will leave shortly afterwards for England. Managers desiring to secure his services must, therefore, apply at once to me, his Agent.

6-11 COL. T. ALLSTON BROWN.

THE CHAPMAN SISTERS.

These two young, beautiful and talented artists, having bought two new pieces, which, with their already large and extensive repertoire, will make them as strong stars as will be in the field next season, have determined to give the combination and play under engagements in all the principal theatres.

THEY WILL NOT MAKE BURLESQUE A SPECIALTY.

They have secured the services of a FIRST CLASS COMEDIAN, who will support them. They have already filled time in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, and St. Louis. They will have a new and magnificent collection of advance pictorial posters and lithographs. Managers can secure them by addressing COL. T. ALLSTON BROWN. 6-11

LITTLE NELL,

THE CALIFORNIA DIAMOND, with her sensational drama of

KATY DID,

pronounced by the press of Albany, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Louisville and Washington one of the greatest successes of the season of 1870-71, opens at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn, on May 15th, for one week, in her drama of which has been entirely reconstructed, and made almost an entirely new play, by the author, Frank Maeder. Managers wishing to secure her should address COL. T. ALLSTON BROWN. 6-11
KATY DID,

WANTED, AN EXPERIENCED

man with a few hundred dollars. To such a one a good chance to make money with a first class lady star will be given. Address

DEAR LOVE, BE KIND.

WRITTEN FOR THE NEW YORK CLIPPER.

Speak to me fondly and kindly—
In the strength of my love, I pray—
Be pitiful to me, darling,
For I'm sorrowful to-day.

Ah! chide not my drooping eyes, dear,
Heavy laden with unshed tears,
But soothe with tender caresses
And silence my doubts and fears.

Sit near, that your presence may calm me
And stifle this pain ere we part,
In the days that are coming, beloved,
You'll learn how to value my heart.

I wish there were words true and tender
With which I could tell you, at last,
How dearly and well I have loved you
Throughout all the miserable past.

But, somehow, to-night language fails me,
My words come so faltering and low—
I'm passing away from you swiftly,
Speak tenderly ere I shall go.

Baltimore, April. MRS. W. F. COOKE.

A STARTLING ABDUCTION CASE.

A GIRL TRACKED, DRUGGED AND CARRIED OFF—A FASHIONABLE DEN OF INFAMY—THE WILES OF A NEW YORK COURTESAN—A STRANGE ESCAPE.

The story which follows is the best evidence of the truthfulness of statements put forth in a recent article published in the Tribune under the head of "The Vilest of Women." The name and address of the victim are withheld out of respect to the wishes of her friends, but will be furnished at this office to any of the officers of justice who may wish to investigate the case:—

At about 11.30 A. M. of the day of the German Peace Jubilee (April 10) a girl, 17 years of age, residing on the east side of the city, left her home, accompanied by two of her acquaintances, to witness the procession. They secured a position on Broadway, opposite the City Hall, where they remained until a long halt took place from a blockade some distance up the street. Becoming wearied of waiting, and believing that the parade must be near its end, they walked down to Barclay street, where they crossed Broadway and passed up Park row and Chatham street to Chatham square. Here her two companions left her. She remained, however, until the throng of wagons, footmen, and equestrians had all gone down town, when she walked down Oliver street to Madison, where she had an engagement to tea at the house of an old playmate. She remained there until 8 o'clock in the evening, when she started for home. She had made the trip several times before and felt perfectly safe. The bustle and hum of the afternoon had scarcely subsided, and the German beer gardens teemed with life. Her route lay through Pike street to Division street and thence up Orchard street to Avenue A. The greater part of the journey had been accomplished when she reached a place where a large crowd was assembled in front of a tall, white house. In the street was erected a large oil painting of King William, over which a strong calcium light was playing for a time. Then the house was brilliantly lighted and illuminated on the outside with Chinese lanterns. There was music in the house and the sound of dancing, and she halted for a moment in the street to listen and admire.

In a moment or two, two handsome, well dressed women approached and spoke very kindly to her. One was tall and fair, the other quite portly and older. The girl thinks that they alighted from a close carriage which she had seen slowly driving along the street. The taller of the women spoke to her of the merits of the portrait and praised the parade of the day. Learning that she had been standing in the sun and dust for hours, the portly lady quite fatigued, the woman remarked that she was looking very weak and that she would better get a drink of water.

Entirely unsuspicious, the girl walked several blocks with them, until they came to an iron drinking fountain, where the elderly woman presented her with a cup of water and she drank. She says she did not notice any peculiar taste in the water, but that in a few seconds she began to grow drowsy and weak, as if from the effects of an opiate. The two women took her between them, telling her that she should be taken directly home. She was too numb to offer any opposition. They hurried her up town for about ten minutes, and then turned to the left into a quiet street, along which they hastened and reached a wide thoroughfare, looking to the girl very much like an avenue. The party finally halted before a large brown stone, high stoop house. The girl recovered herself sufficiently to notice that all the house near were of the external appearance, and with emblazoning lamps in front. She instantly told them that this house was not her home and refused to enter. They suddenly placed a large handkerchief over her mouth and nostrils, when she fainted away and remained unconscious until the next morning.

The girl's account of her sufferings is given from this point in her own words:—

About 10 o'clock the next morning I awoke in a large back parlor, on the first floor, with large windows looking out into a small yard. I was lying on a sofa, and at my side, fanning me, sat a tall, portly lady. She was very fair, with dark blue eyes and a high, white forehead, covered with a profusion of false black hair, under which, at the temples, small patches of gray were visible. She wore a black silk wrapper and an abundance of jewelry. I asked her where I was, and if my mother was in the house. I told her that I had been sunstruck the day before. Upon my wanting to know how that could occur after dark, she remarked that I had fainted in front of the house. (She afterwards said the fainting occurred near the Jubilee grounds.) When told that I must be a stranger there, she said I was much relieved, and feeling perfectly safe in the company of such a fine looking old lady. I lay still and dozed till noon.

Upon again awakening I found myself alone in the same room, but seeing a bell cord the white pull hung in Brocade. Soon the stout lady again entered. I instantly asked if my mother had come.

"No," she said; "and you need not expect to see her, for she can never come here." I begged to be told the reason, but was remained silent. I then burst into tears, and, telling her that my poor mother would be almost wild about me, besought her to release me. The woman, or, as she afterwards proved to be, "the madam," became excited, and exclaimed:—"You fool girl, might as well make up your mind that you will never get out of this house." And upon my asking the reason, she grimly remarked:—"I will tell you next week."

Then, for the first time, the awful reality burst upon me that I was a doomed girl. I sprang to my feet, put on my hat and shawl, which had been lying on a chair since my entrance. At this the woman began to laugh in a mocking tone and demanded what I was about to do. I told her I was determined to quit the house, and, instantly stepping to the open window, jumped into the yard with a loud scream. The lot was inclosed by a high board fence. I was instantly seized by three women, who came from the back basement, and, having bound a handkerchief over my mouth, they dragged me into the house and up stairs to the second floor. The mistress of the house followed closely after, and, when the women had pushed me into a large back room, I was left alone with her. "Now, you fool girl," she said, "this room and you and I alone are now in a room from which you cannot escape." She went out, and, after carefully locking the door, I could hear her retreating footsteps upon the stairs.

I then looked around the room. I noticed that the windows were barred with strong iron wire grating, placed between the sash and the shutters. The door was of black walnut and very heavy. The room was magnificently furnished. A rich, round piano stood in one corner, and the upholstering was all in crimson velvet. A marble top table, upon which stood a large mirror, and a bureau with some dressing-case, which, like the bedstead, was of solid rosewood, stood against the wall, and an inlaid writing desk was placed between the two windows of the room.

Having ascended, after several attempts, in raising the window, I began to scream. The mistress again entered, and, being very strong, seized and threw me upon the bed, and thrust a handkerchief into my mouth until I was almost suffocated. She even threatened to gag me, and, finding that I refused to be hushed, to leave me there till I should promise to keep still. Seeing no other way out of present torment, I agreed to be quiet, whereupon she removed the rag and released her grasp upon my wrists. After seeing that I kept my word, she left me.

The tall woman of the evening before then entered, dressed in a lavender-colored silk wrapper, trimmed with white lace, and wearing a breastpin set in rubies, from which depended a gold watch chain. She looked even more handsome than before, and the wide flowing sleeves of her dress disclosed a white arm with gold bracelets. She greeted me as her "little friend," and, when I told her that I did not wish to be called with such familiar endearments and that I would soon get over all that sort of talk. She concluded by offering to be a friend to me, and remarked that I would soon get used to the place and the life, when I would be happy. Seeing that I repelled all proffers of friendship, she changed the conversation.

"What colored silk would you prefer for a suit?" she asked.

"I do not want any," I answered.

Not appearing to notice my answer, she asked, "How do you like this suit I have on?"

"Very well," I said; "but I should not care for it if obtained in this manner."

"You must compose yourself," she quietly replied, "for you could not surely hope to live always with your mother. I once had a mother whom I loved dearly, and a sister, too, about your age."

"If you had such a sister you ought to pity me for her sake. Where is your mother?"

"She is dead. She died in Spain more than four years ago. I have no friends in this country, and was first led to taking an interest in you from your resemblance to my sister." The tall woman for the first time seemed to show the slightest trace of feeling at this time, said, "In a few days you shall go to your mother." She then offered to kiss me, but I retreated upon her approach.

This not this a hangue. He remained she began in a few minutes. I was obliged to admit that it was indeed comfortable.

"Well then," said she, "would you not rather live here with me, in the fine room, than go back to your humble home? Here are books, pictures, and everything about which a young heart could desire. There are few such charms about your home in——street."

"What!" said I, in amazement, "do you know where I live?"

"O! yes," she said, smiling grimly, "and a great deal more." With this she drew from her pocket a roll of white paper, from which she began to read. She told my name, residence, age, together with my height and complexion and a full history of my family, she said her father had failed in business in 1864; on my trip to Europe during the Paris Exposition; that I had two brothers; that I liked music, and even mentioned my favorite novelist. She concluded by asking me how I was pleased with Hamburg. I was dumb with astonishment.

Noticing my chagrin, she remarked, folding up and replacing the paper in her pocket, "So you see, my young miss, I know as much about you and your family as you do yourself. If you will stay with us you shall want for nothing, and be able to support yourself in good style. You have given us more trouble than any case we have ever had, but we will soon, I feel confident, get to know each other and get along together happily. You ought to be a little more civil to madam when she comes in. Indeed, you have actually have a care in this particular, for she has a very hasty temper and would go to almost any extreme." She then left me.

A servant girl entered in a few minutes with a large silver platter, and, having placed it on the centre table, retired without saying a word. I determined not to touch a morsel for fear of drugs. After a little time the "madam" entered, and seeing the victuals on the table untouched, asked why I did not eat. I told her that if she did not release me I would die of starvation. I was greatly excited, and stepping forward, seized the platter and threw it to the farther end of the room, breaking every piece of the china.

The madam became furious and approached me, but I managed to get behind the table. In our chase around the room she had screamed at me not to overset a large glass globe standing upon a card table. In the quiet which succeeded I seized it and threw it upon the floor. The globe was filled with costly cologne, and the air of the room was filled with its fragrance. The madam seized me by the hair (the young woman is a blonde with very abundant hair), and dragged me over the floor. In her fury she stamped upon and kicked me, and when I screamed she struck me in the right eye. The pain was very great, and my face was swollen for more than a week afterwards. She said I was acting "perfectly outrageous," and that if I did not become quiet she would break me in no very "easy" way. The tall woman, who had several times come to my rescue, then entered, and took the madam away. After the servant had cleared away the broken china and swept up the carpet, she withdrew and I was left alone for several hours.

While wandering around the room in a state of mental agony, I saw the end of a heavy iron rod projecting from behind the dressing case. Drawing the wardrobe slightly forward, I saw that it was an iron bar, or about one and a half feet in length, which, running through three staples (two on the sills and one on the panel), served as a bolt to a door leading into another apartment. It was perfectly flat, and was fresced like the wall, but could see a streak of light under its lower edge. It was firmly fastened on the other side and resisted all my efforts. I took the rod, determining to keep it always near me, as with it to defend myself.

My attention was accidentally drawn to the writing desk. With the iron rod I succeeded in forcing open the lid, and there found, among any quantity of correspondence, about 22 letters, of which I selected the following as an example:—

The paper I selected was written on a piece of office paper, with the card of "Messrs. —— & Co., —— street, shipping merchants," at the head. It read as follows:—

MADAM.—You shall have $4,000 in advance for Jenetta, whose description I send you in full, and $4,000 more when I have her. Yours, GEORGE ——.

The next was this:—

FIFTH AVENUE, March 20th, 1871.

MADAM.—I send you $1,000 advance and will let you have the other $4,000 in two months' time, if you will get me just such a girl as I describe to you. I am about to leave for Havana. I am.

DOCTOR.

There were three other notes from the Doctor, with dates more or less remote. In one he spoke of a girl who was working at Madam ——'s, a hairdresser's shop on Broadway, for whom he would pay even $10,000 rather than not possess her. The shopping merchant told also, in another note, of a servant girl at No. — Madison avenue, near Thirty-fourth street, and gave a full description of her height, complexion, etc. He even stated the hour at which she usually went out on errands, and concluded by offering $3,000 for her.

I had scarcely finished reading the letters and closed the desk when the tall woman entered. After again remonstrating with me for my conduct towards madam, and admiring my blue silk, saying, "I have an invitation for you to attend a party which the lady of the house is going to give to-morrow (Wednesday) evening, and, as it will be impossible for you to have this dress finished in time, I will lend you one of mine. The dressing will be up in the morning to measure you for the suit, and she has suggested that it should be trimmed with point lace. I will also lend you my diamond jewelry. A jeweler will be here in a few days to give you your choice of several patterns of necklace and bracelets. I am anxious to have you look well to-morrow night, as there will be a very fine gentleman here. He is independently wealthy, and says that he cannot live without you."

Upon my telling her, at the conclusion of this harangue, that I would have none of her dresses or jewelry, nor see the "gentleman," she said hastily, "How foolish you do act. The dress will cost $300, and, after all the attention which we have paid to you, is this the way you treat us?"

A few moments having elapsed, to which neither of us said anything, she remarked, rising to leave, "The gentleman may be here to-night. If he comes I will bring him up to your room. You shall come and dress you; there are a number of fine dresses in the wardrobe."

I th n showed her the iron rod which I had found, and told her that if he should enter the room I would use it. Instinctively she glanced towards the writing desk, and finding that the lock was broken, demanded, in a gasp, if I had opened it. I walked towards the piano, intending to spring upon her all the same, and did not answer. She stepped to the door and called for the servant girl, who at once removed the desk into another room. I was afterwards searched. The madam came in after the "my friend" left, and began to abuse me and called me all manner of names. The tall woman soon returned and took her away.

Prompted by the discoveries which I had made in the writing desk, I was no sooner alone again than I began a search in the drawers of the dressing case. In the back corner of the lower drawer I found a small morocco bound Bible, on the title page of which was written in a fine feminine hand, the name "Isadora Doiarias; Her Book." I had scarcely memorized the name before the tall lady re-entered, and seeing the book in my hand, manifested signs of alarm. She went to the door and called the madam. When they came in both appeared excited. I should here state that when they came in both appeared excited. I should here state that the door was always locked on the outside, even if the woman only left for a moment. They tried to approach me, but brandishing the only weapon of defence which I possessed, the iron bar, I kept them at bay. Seeing that force would not avail, the tall woman, assuming a composed tone of voice, said:—You have not opened the book? I will give you this pocket book!"—producing a well filled wallet—"or my diamonds, or anything for that Bible. It was given me by my mother just before I left home." I threw the book to me by my mother just before I left home." I threw the book to her. After whispering together a few moments they left the apartment.

I now gave up all hope of gaining my liberty. The gas had been lighted some time before, and it was now quite dark outside. I had been 24 hours in the house. About 10 o'clock a servant came to the door and asked if I did not want some refreshment; still fearing to eat their food, I declined.

The tall woman, whom I shall now call Isadora, came in directly after and brought a suit, telling me to dress myself, as the "gentleman" she had expected was down stairs, and she wanted to introduce him. I refused to allow the suit to be put on, and declared my intention to break everything in the room if she offered to bring up the "gentleman." She then bade me good night and left me. Placing the back of a chair under the door knob, and turning a heavy chair upside down against the wardrobe, I lay down upon the sofa. I was awake almost all night, my extreme hunger and fear preventing me from closing my eyes.

At daylight I was awakened by a knock at the door. Having ascertained that it was Isadora, I removed the chair and allowed her to enter. After a few words had been exchanged, she spoke substantially as follows:—"It is impossible for you to get out, but if you should, your folks are poor, and can't do anything with us. You speak of justice. Pshaw! There is no such thing in this city —money will do anything. We have at our command the thousands of those who know that we hold their fair name and the honor of their families in our hands. These men are our slaves, and not a few ruined fortunes are due to the hold which a woman in this business gets upon a man. If a man keeps out of stocks, he cannot run through his fortune fast enough, so he lets some woman—lady, I mean—get possession of some secret which he would die rather than it should be known—then the work of dissolution begins. Those who call themselves justices come here. Detectives—we bribe them. Detective P—— is even in our employ. If they should come they would not find us at home, for this is a large house, and there are several ways of getting out of it." Leaving these assurances as grains of consolation, the tall lady departed.

The madam then entered, bringing all the morning papers, and, after laying them down, said:—"You will see that your folks do not care about you, for they have not advertised you as missing. Stop your fretting, then, and you will never regret it." She then left me alone till 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

During the interval several of the girls in the house came in to visit me. I learned that there were in all 26 women in the building. I once or twice heard sobs and prayers coming from an adjoining room. The voice was undoubtedly that of a young girl. Her lamentations were something like this:—"Oh, if I could only get out!" and "My poor mother!" I could not get any information from any of the girls. When I was alone I wrote a note, intending to throw it out of the window into the adjoining yard but the madam, entering suddenly, surprised me and seized the paper.

When the two women again opened the door, at about 4 o'clock, I was sitting in a chair feigning sleep. The mistress of the house said in a whisper:—"What shall we do with her? The case in the other room is just as bad, before I left home." Then they left without entering the room.

THE ESCAPE.

I was left alone until about 10 o'clock at night, when a girl, who had visited me during the afternoon, came in. She said that she pitied me, and that if I was determined to resist to the bitter end all attempts to ruin me (meaning, of course, if possible, get me on the town), she would help me. She then told me that the "gentleman" had evidently commenced below, for I could hear the noise of the piano and the frequent opening and closing of the front hall door; persons were continually passing and repassing along the hall. She said I must submit to be closely veiled, for I must never know where I had been. I agreed to this proposition with reluctance, but, goaded on by the hope of escape, finally consented.

I sat in expectation for several hours, and finally began to think that she had been deceiving me. I had nearly abandoned all hope of her coming, and began to weep bitterly, when she entered noiselessly and, telling me that it was after 2 o'clock, hurriedly threw my shawl around my shoulders. Tying off my hair she covered my head with a very heavy green veil, and led me down stairs. She remarked that the ladies had all retired, and that there was very little danger. We descended to the basement, and having passed the front door, she extorted a promise me from that I would there await her return. She quickly unlocked the door, and after having fastened it behind her, ran down the street. After having been absent ten minutes she returned, and said that she had succeeded in finding a driver of one of the carriages at the door, who, for a consideration of $10 (which she had pledged him) had agreed to take us away. Making sure that my eyes were closely veiled she led me out, closed the door, hurried with me along the street, and into the cab which was standing near. The curtains were drawn down and the cab drove off. It was a very tedious ride so that at the end of about half an hour I felt much the worse for it and noticed that we stopped once for several minutes. My companion said very little but retained a tight hold on my arm. About daylight the cab stopped, and upon my asking her how I could return the money with which she had procured my deliverance, she said to send it through the post office to "Edith Purcell, Box No. —." This I have since done, together with a handsome present. I have never since heard of her or the house in which I was confined. Stepping out of the cab it drove rapidly away, and I found myself in a sparsely settled neighborhood. Seeing a street car pass at a distance I walked down towards the crossing, took the next car, and was astonished when, upon asking the conductor, he pulled in Brooklyn. I had nothing to ride of about 45 minutes brought me to Fulton Ferry, and I was more astonished when on arriving at home I found the family at breakfast. They asked why I had returned so soon. Their treatment and the absence of the advertisement was fully explained when they produced a letter from me, in which it was stated that I would stay "several days" with my friend Mary —— on Madison street. The note was written with a pencil, and had been delivered by a boy on the night of the German Jubilee. This is the end of my story. I ascribe my deliverance to the mercy of Divine Providence.

THE FORD DIVORCE SUIT.

COMMENDABLE SUPPRESSION OF OBSCENE EVIDENCE.

The old suit of Frederick W. Ford agt. Mary M. Ford, for divorce, on the ground of adultery, came up, on May 4th, in the Special Term of the Superior Court before Judge McCunn. Counsel for the plaintiff, in opening the case, said that the details would necessarily be obscene, but he should subdue them as much as possible. Judge McCunn replied that if the facts were so indecent, the case had better be referred. Counsel on both sides objected to this mode of trial, on the ground of the great expense thereby incurred, which could hardly be met by the persons concerned, who are both poor. Judge McCunn accordingly allowed the trial to proceed, remarking that he should be compelled to listen to the most disgusting obscene evidence, and that he should have to call upon the reporters to abstain from giving anything which would shock propriety.

The plaintiff is one of the clerks in the First District Court, a position he has, it is said, for some years most satisfactorily filled. He is a small, nervous man, of pleasing and prepossessing appearance and keenly penetrating eyes, and dresses in the height of fashion, with a weakness for jewelry and a flashy cravat.

The defendant belongs to the order of bewitchingly bewildering blondes. She has a classic face, languishing blue eyes and appeared apparelled in the most approved fashionable style, and, in addition, giving added charms to her beauty by a lavish display of costly jewelry. Alongside her husband she appears almost Amazonian, which some might consider a drawback to her beauty, but which really imparts to her—however insignificant her husband looks in contrast with her—queenly grace and dignity. At the time Mr. Ford became acquainted with his wife she was living, and had filling the position of waiter girl in a concert saloon. Enraptured with her personal charms, he pushed his suit, engaged her to marry him, and, after a very brief acquaintance and wooing, they were married. She left the concert saloon and for a time, according to their united story, they lived quite happily. In a short time, however—and this is her statement—he insisted upon her renewing her old life again. Her scruples were found, exacted from her the major part of her earnings, and at length, dissatisfied with her pecuniary contributions, which, she says, were spent by him in riotous dissipation and in running after other women, he told her to go out and cruise in the streets, so as to earn more money. She charges him with frequent personal violence also, all of which he denies. Finally he left her and brought the present suit, charging her with adultery, and upon this asking to be divorced from her.

The first witness called was Officer Carr, of the eighth precinct. His testimony did not develop much of material importance, except having once seen the defendant at what he designated as a prostitutes' ball, corner of Broadway and Houston street. In answering him was Captain Mills, whose testimony referred to the time he was captain of the eighth precinct, and the character, from a police point of view, of Nos. 101 and 113 Greene street, where the defendant had lived since. He had known Mrs. Ford from the time she was a mere child, and knew her mother very well. The defendant had followed his advice she would have turned out greatly different from what she has. Captain Hedden, of the fifteenth precinct, was the next witness. His evidence was only important as drawing a nice discrimination between houses known as assignation houses and a certain class of furnished houses he pronounced of equally immoral character, whose chief distinguishing feature is furnishing board and lodging for adulterous couples with whom the wife or a lady only. Having made clear this point, he specified sundry houses of both descriptions, at which the defendant, it was claimed, had respectively stopped for short and longer periods, according to their proximity to the residence of Captain Mallon, of the eighth precinct, was called upon to give his views of No. 113 Greene street. He confirmed the statement, and then went on to say in addition that he had seen the defendant subsequent to her marriage hanging out of the window and on the stoop and from the windows, nodding invitingly to gentlemen passing by. He did not know but that these gentlemen might be her acquaintances, but very much doubted it, and further ventured the opinion that no virtuous lady would act as she did. Proceeding with his testimony he said he had known the defendant since 1864, and that she consorted with prostitutes; once she came to the station house greatly indignant because a man had entered her into the house.

Detective Reilly gave his particular views upon various important matters in general, when Wiliam McNulty, a neat looking young man, gorgeously arrayed, was placed on the stand. He announced his vocation that of barkeeper. His testimony was brief and pointed. "Do you know the defendant?" the plaintiff's counsel asked him. "Yes, sir." "When did you form her acquaintance?" "Last August." "Where?" "At the Prospect Hall Concert Saloon." "What followed from that acquaintance?" "After I left the saloon, the same evening I formed her acquaintance, she went with me to the assignation house, No 5 Amity place." "What followed after you?" "Rang the bell." "What next?" "Told the landlady I wanted a room for a little while." "What next?" "Paid for the room." "What next?" "We were shown to the room." "What next?" "We both undressed and went to bed." "What next?" "Changed my mind about that," quickly exposed the judge, and the concluding portion was not told. This was in August, 1870.

Succeeding this witness was unfolded by Henry Massing, an associate clerk to the plaintiff, a view from an inside point. He had known both parties to the suit for several years; had gone frequently with plaintiff to concert saloons after his wife, and had dined with them; once on a time since their marriage he was standing on an iron bed in the rear yard of No. 113 Greene street, (but how he came to be there he did not explain), when, looking into the room, he saw Mrs. Ford with only a wrapper on, and in the bed a man. "Who was the man?" "Don't know." "Might it not have been Mr. Ford?" "No, sir; he was at the District Court." "How do you know?" "I had just left him there."

The next revelation against the plaintiff was showing that following a pic-nic excursion, and the reverse was one James Wheeland. He went with a Caledonian picnic party to Jones' Wood, and there formed Mrs. Ford's acquaintance. She invited him home with her and he went. They went to No. 113 Greene street. "Did she take you to her room?" "Well, details that occurred." "Never mind the details," said the Judge. "Well, then, how long did you stay there?" "Several hours." "Give her any money?" "No, sir." "Order any wine?" "No, sir." "confectionery?" "No, sir; didn't give a cent for anything." "Has plaintiff ever commenced a suit against you for divorce for adultery?" was the only question put on the cross-examination, which the Judge told the witness he need not answer, and which he did not. This ended the evidence for the plaintiff, when the case opened for the defendant.

After the counsel had indicated his line of defence and characterized the plaintiff as an exceedingly vile and miserable wretch, Thomas King, the father of the defendant, was called as a witness. He said that after his daughter was married to the plaintiff they lived quite a while at 113 Greene street, his (the witness') house, at his (the witness') request. They moved from there to Eighteenth street and then to 20 Bleecker street, and he paid the rent at both places. He found her actually suffering for want of the necessaries of life and brought her home again. Once he heard his daughter screaming and went to their room and found him treating her with great violence because she refused to give him all her earnings. No strange men ever came to her at his house. Ford spent his money on other women, and once he gave him $100, as he said he would lose his place otherwise. The only remaining feature of interest in his testimony was proving an alibi. He said his daughter during the entire of last August was sick, a part of the time in St. Luke's Hospital, and part of the time at Long Branch, where she went for her health.

A pretty waiter girl, in the person of Miss Hattie Stafford, told of her having been in the same concert saloon with Mrs. Ford, and how they occupied rooms in the same house, No. 20 Bleecker street, and had seen Mr. Ford catch his wife by the hair of her head and push and beat her because she would not give him all the money he asked for; she had frequently seen her give him money, both at the concert saloon and at their room, and once told her if she could not bring him more money she must go out and cruise for it.

The testimony of three more witnesses comprised the concluding testimony. One of whom was Michael Arkway, proprietor of the Broadway Garden, and Solomon Parrish, his barkeeper. They testified to Mrs. Fore's general behavior being regular and proper. The last witness was a Mrs. Quigly, who gave rather bewildering testimony, trying to show that the plaintiff had once paid the expenses of a young lady at her house. The testimony being all in, the Judge quickly announced "Judgment of divorce is granted," and so ended the case. During the several hours which it occupied the court room was crowded. Mrs. Ford, though she took the late judgment of the court with seeming quiet indifference, was several times during its progress deeply affected.

AN ELOPEMENT NIPPED IN THE BUD.—Jas. J. Bunce, of Beaver Falls, N. Y., who has a wife and child, eloped with Joseph ne Mariner, a miss of 19. Arriving in New York the day last week, the runaways took rooms at 146 Chrystie st eet, whither they were traced by the police accompanied by a brother of Josephine. The moment that the officers entered the room Bunce made his exit, leaping rom the second story window. Mr. Mariner took his sister home.

WOODHULL, CLAFLIN & CO.

A SERIOUS CHARGE AGAINST J. H. BLOOD.

A case calculated to excite public interest, because of the prominence of the parties, was brought before Justice Ledwith in the E sex Market Police Court on the afternoon of the 4th inst., in the form of an application for the issue of a warrant for the arrest of James H. Blood, alias Dr. J. H. Harvey, the "Dr." of the firm of Woodhull & Claflin, the bankers, of Wall street; the brokers, of Broad street; the publishers, of Beekman street; the Women's Rights at large, and the what else will be seen by the subjoined affidavits. The application was made by Mr. John D. Townsend, counsel for the deponent, Mrs. Annie Claflin, mother of the said firm of many occupations.

Mrs. Annie, says the Star of the 5th inst., is an ancient and venerable dame, woe-begone and poorly clad. She bore the haggard looks of one who had been subjected to the cruel and terrifying treatment detailed in her affidavit from which her helpless old age, if no more Christian sentiment, should have shielded her.

After a glance at her Lear-like countenance the humane judge granted the warrant, to which was applied for on the annexed affidavits. The p or woman then left the court accompanied by one of her daughters, Mrs. Sparr, and her counsel, with her mind evidently relieved from the burden of a great cloud. She says that her daughter Tennessee has been her favorite child, and until very recently has treated her most kindly and affectionately. She further says that she feels in danger of her life, and believes that she is not safe from the said James H. Blood, and therefore prays that he may be arrested and dealt with according to law.

ANNIE CLAFLIN.

Sworn to before me, this 2d day of May, 1871.

THEODORE M. TRETHILL,
Notary Public, New York county.

Mrs. Mary Sparr, one of Mrs. Claflin's daughters, and Benjamin F. Sparr, her husband, also made affidavits confirming the above, the latter adding that "he was engaged in the same bank, as it is called, of Woodhull, Claflin & Co., and knows that it is a fraud upon the public, and he further says that he is well satisfied from what he knows of the said James H. Blood, that he is a man of low and contemptible character."

The same paper, in its issue of the following day, contained a statement from the parties charged in the above affidavit, totally denying the allegations therein, from which we can only quote briefly from lack of space:—

MISS TENNIE C'S STATEMENT.—Miss Tennie C. was next called for the favor. The press has always been very fair to us since we have come prominently before the public, and I will avail myself of your kind offer, to some extent at least. If the statements made in my mother's affidavit had been made to me I should not take the least trouble to contradict them. But you know how painful it is to one's feelings to be thus maligned by one's own mother. I do not care a pin what the public may say of me, because I know that to be publicly abused is the penalty attached to distinction of any kind; but I feel it hard that the mother to whom I have been so kind should speak so of me.....Mr. Claflin, the father, was present during the interview. He could not say that I was to blame for Holland's benefit. This was not altogether satisfactory, and another pocket was searched, and another bundle of tickets for Holland's benefit came to light, and every pocket was searched with like results. It so on got buzzed through the market that a man had been pulled out of the water in a state of insensibility, with a lot of tickets for Holland's benefit in his pocket. Holland was a great favorite among the boys in the market, and knowing his habit of coming down there for oysters, it was at once thought the funny man had at length played a part in a deep tragedy. A number of the butchers and market people rushed to the spot, and there, sure enough, lay the veritable comedian in a state of unconsciousness. Some vigorous measures were applied which Holland could not resist. He rapidly came to himself, and, with a very serious and confounded air, asked where he was. "All right, old boy," was the reply; "you're among friends. Keep still and we'll take care of you." He then put his hands into his pockets, and searching first one, then the other, exclaimed:—"I've lost all my tickets!" "No, you havn't, neither; here they are, all safe." "Give them to me. I'm much obliged; I feel quite well now." "Look here, old fellow—stop a bit! You're benefit comes off to-morrow night. I ain't worth while to take the tickets away; I guess we can soon sell them around here;" and away went the speaker. He had not been gone very long before he returned, with cash in hand for all the tickets for Holland's benefit. And thus was the object gained for which George Holland tumbled into the water.

KILLING WHALES BY CANNON.—A recent writer in Land and Water recounts a late visit to the establishment of Herr Foyen, in the Veranger Fiord, where, from a small island, the fishery is prosecuted by means of two small steamers of about seventy tons each. The special apparatus employed consists of a harpoon, inclosing in its head half a pound of gunpowder, and with joined or hinged barbs containing some percussion powder between them. When the whale is within gunshot, this harpoon, attached to the end of a long cord coiled around a drum, is fired into the animal from a cannon about the size of a four pounder. As the fluke penetrates the side of the whale, they are naturally brought together or pressed down toward the shaft, and in so doing ignite the percussion powder, which sets fire to the gunpowder, causing an explosion in the body of the animal that usually produces a mortal wound. The whale, of course, starts off under the stimulus of the pain, and the rope is carried out for a time, being unwilled from a drum precisely like a fishing line from the reel of a fishing rod, the steamer following after, so as to prevent any undue strain. It necessary a second discharge takes place, which almost invariably produces death.

AN ANCIENT PUGILIST.—One of the most remarkable athletes of history was Melemcoonas, who lived under the Emperor Titus, and whose training was such that at an order that several noted poets of his time were found ready to sing his glowing praises. His line was the pugilistic and his specialty was the defensive entirely. He would hold out for hours, his arms extended in the face of his enemy, who sought in vain to reach him, and who bruised himself in futile efforts to break through those two muscular bars, as resistant as steel. It is said he could remain two days in this fighting position. By this manœuvre he deprived his adversaries of every chance, and forced them, exhausted with the long struggle, to leave him with the victory resting upon his sturdy shoulders. He would then leave the arena without having given or received a single bow. He regarded with pity those of his brethren, who, after heavy punching of each other, were obliged to be helped to their home by others, and considered this great waste of strength a proof of actual weakness.

SLEEPING TOGETHER.—More quarrels arise between brothers, between sisters, between tired girls, between school girls, between clerks in stores, between apprentices, between hired men, between husbands and wives, owing to electrical changes through which their nervous systems go, by lodging together, night after night under the same bed clothes, than by any other disturbing cause. There is nothing that will so derange the nervous system of a person who is eliminative of nervous force, as to be all night in bed with another person who is absorbent of nervous force. The absorber will go to sleep and rest all night, while the eliminator will be fumbling and tossing, restless and nervous, and wake up in the morning, fretful, peevish, fault-finding and discouraged. No two persons, no matter who they are, should habitually sleep together. One will thrive and the other will lose. This is the law, and in married life it is defied almost universally.

AN UNNATURAL FATHER.

HIS SIX DAUGHTERS FORCED INTO CRIMINAL INTIMACY WITH HIM—THREE INFANTS MURDERED AS SOON AS BORN.

The trial of Joel W. Perkins, of Cornwall, Ct., for incest and murder, began on April 28th, in the Litchfield County, and the most shocking developments have come to light. During ten years, Perkins has been guilty of incest with his six daughters, using compulsion in each case. The eldest daughter is now 28 years old, and has given birth to five children, the result of her father's unnatural crime. Two of these children are living, one having been born since the arrest of Perkins. The other three children it is believed were murdered immediately after birth. The girl testifies that she never saw them, but heard their cries before her father took them from the room. In the case of another daughter, one child was born and did not survive. A third daughter is now enceinte. The wife of the accused died two or three weeks ago of paralysis. Perkins is 54 years old, has always lived in Litchfield County, and is believed were murdered immediately after birth. The is 54 years old, has always lived in Litchfield County, and is believed to be intelligent and capable of holding a good position in the community, but has kept his family aloof from society, and denied them the privileges of the church, and lived in abject squalor and poverty. A reporter of the Courant had an interview with Perkins, and he confessed his criminal intimacy with his daughters, but denied having taken the life of his offspring, and stated that with two of his daughters he has had no intimacy. He asserts that his wife had knowledge of his crimes and encouraged them, and that his daughters invited them. He has read the Scriptures since he has been in jail, but says he never read the Bible before, nor much of any thing else. He says he did not know there was any law against such practices as his, nor that there was anything in Scripture condemning them. The daughters say that their father has compelled them to accede to his wishes under threats that he would kill them if they refused or divulged. He began his practices when they were 13 years of age.—N. Y. Tribune.

A TERRIBLE OUTRAGE.—Michael McKenna, alias McGuire, toge her with three others, who are unknown, on the night of the 27th ult., broke in the door of Mrs. Sarah M. Bogart's residence, No. 123 West Fifty-second street, this city, and demanded that supper would be prepared for them. Mrs. Bogart, who is a widow, aged 38 years, was sitting in the kitchen with two young girls named Emma Gliaspy and Louisa Brandon, who were saying the night with her. Seeing that supper would not be got for them, the ruffians then demanded that Mrs. Bogart would go out and get them drink. This she also refused to do and told them to leave. They then commenced to demolish the furniture and wound up by breaking the kerosene lamp, leaving the house in total darkness. One of the party then caught Mrs. Bogart, and shoved her into an adjoining bedroom, where he attempted to throw her on the floor. She successfully resisted the ruffian until McKenna rushed into the room, and both together overpowered and ravished her, one holding her down while the other accomplished his nefarious purpose. The two girls during this time were shouting for assistance and protecting themselves from the attacks of the remaining two brutes. The party left about 12.30 o'clock, after having destroyed all the furniture in the house and committing the above outrage. Next morning, Captain Killalea, of the Twenty-second Precinct, arrested McKenna and took him to the Yorkville Police Court, where Alderman Divver committed him to the Tombs without bail. While making her affadavit Mrs. Bogart fainted and had to be carried out to the air. Complaints were also made against McKenna, by the girls Gliaspy and Brandon, for assault and battery.

HE CLAIMS HIS VALENTINE.—A young and interesting woman, known as Miss Bella Carpenter, a resident of Bay Side, L. I., was quite recently married to Mr. Jerome Valentine, of the same place. Everything went on smoothly until April 24th, when a Mr. Walter Waldron appeared and claimed Mrs. Valentine as his wife, stating that he had married her some ten months since in New Jersey, and that she had lived with him as his wife for some time. Mrs. Valentine denied all this, and secured a warrant, upon which Waldron was arrested and brought before Justice Lawrence on the 28th. Here a curiously mixed up string of circumstances were elicited. On the cross-examination of the prisoner, he admitted that he had previously been married twice, and that the woman last named was still living, but in explanation he stated that he had been divorced from his first wife and had then re-married the same woman, but that such re-marriage being illegal according to the laws of the state in which the divorce had been granted, it was in effect no marriage at all; that Miss Carpenter had married him with a full knowledge of all these facts, and that he could bring proof that they had lived together as husband and wife. Mrs. Valentine contradicts this statement as far as it relates to herself. The matter has caused great excitement at Bay Side and Flushing, where all the parties are widely known.

A NAUGHTY M. D.—Dr. Albion Cobb, principal of the academy at Wilton, Me., was arrested by the Niagara Frontier Police on the morning of the 27th ult., charged with deserting his wife and four children and eloping with a young lady pupil, who was an invalid under his charge. Cobb, on being arrested, denied hailing from Wilton. He is about fifty years of age. His victim is eighteen years old, good-looking and intelligent. She acknowledges all and says her parents reside at Farmington, Me. The name of the young girl is Mary L. Dow. Dr. Cobb had rented and furnished rooms for an office and living room and

BASE BALL.

THE NEW CHICAGO BALL FIELD.

On Saturday, April 29th, the new ball grounds located on the Lake Park, Chicago, were opened to the public by the play ng of a game between the White Stockings and a strong picked nine. The weather was all that could have been desired, the Whites in a splendid condition to play, their opponents such as to test their mettle, and the fifteen hundred persons present settled back on their comfortable seats, confident that the first contest on the new grounds would be well worth seeing. The Whites, winning the toss, sent the picked nine to the bat and the game commenced.

Hallinan was first to the bat, and popping up a little fly to Duffy; the latter failed to hold it, and the striker took his base; Tansey; the latter failed to hold it, and the striker took his base; Tansey; the latter failed to reach Jimmy's skill and retired; Foley next to the bat, and over tried Jimmy's skill and retired; Foley next to the bat, and on over tried Jimmy's skill and retired; Foley next to the bat, and on the second attempt sent a foul ball over the fence on the left. This proved to be the only instance of the kind throughout the game, from finally set to his first on the fly he sent Simmons, who dropped from finally set to his first on the fly he sent Simmons, who dropped it, Hallinan getting home. Taylor was third out by Wood to McAtee. One run. The Whites then went to the bat, McAtee, as usual, leading. He made a showy hit to centre field, where the ball was nicely taken by Graves. King sent an easy grounder to Reid, who threw it wildly, and Mac held first. Hodes was second out by Atwater to Reynolds. Wood went to first on called ball, Simmons on Taylor's muff, King scoring. Treacy closed the innings by Atwater to Reynolds. One run.

It is unnecessary to go on in detail through the balance of the innings. The game upon the whole was a poor one, not a solitary run being earned on either side.

The Chicagos' run in the first innings was secured partially in consequence of called balls, but mainly through Reynolds' wild throwing and Taylor's wretched muff of Simmons' easy grounder. Duffy led off the second innings with a magnificent hit to right field, scoring two bases and getting to his third. Pinkham and Zettlein scoring two bases and getting to his third. Pinkham and Zettlein scoring two bases and getting to his third. Pinkham and Zettlein went out in quick succession, and McAtee should have followed suit, but Reid failed to get his low-bounder in time, and Mac held first, Duffy scoring his run. The three runs in the fifth innings were gained in this wise:—McAtee took first on a pretty hit to short field, and got to second on passed ball; King and Hodes went out, and Wood, sending a corker to third, got to first, although the ball was splendidly stopped and superbly thrown by Reynolds. This carried Mac to third, and he soon afterwards got home on a passed ball. Simmons hit a beauty to centre field, taking first. This would have legitimately sent Mac to his third, and Treacy, next to the bat, had but to make a safe hit to earn Mac's run, but he popped up a soft fly to Hallinan, who dropped it, and another man (Wood) got home. Duffy took first on Reynolds' muff, and the third man (Simmons) got home. Pinkham ended the fun by going out on a foul bound to Reynolds.

The best batting of the game was done by the Whites in the seventh innings. Hodes and Wood both out to start with; Simmons then went to bat and made the prettiest hit of the game, sending a hot liner out to the right field. He earned two bases, but on observing Grant's slow handling, kept on to third. Treacy next to the bat, hit safe to left field for two bases. Grant handled the ball quickly, and sent it in handsomely to home plate. Foley had plenty of time to put out Simmons, who was running from third, but instead of devoting his attention to Joe, he threw the ball to second base, thinking to catch Treacy napping there, and as a consequence neither was put out, and a run scored. Duffy sent a neat liner over second base, taking his first, but was left, as Pinkham went out on a fly to Tanner.

In the eighth innings, the Whites piled up four, not one of which was earned. Zettlein was first out on a foul bound to Foley, McAtee went to first on a corking hit to left field. King on three balls, Hodes on a muff, and took first, Mac's retirement at third by Hallinan to Reid; Wood to first on called balls, then Simmons stepped out and hit one of his beauties to left field, earning one base. Grant sent in the ball wild to Foley, at home plate, who passed it, and the ball rolled in under the seats, stayed there until all the bases were cleared and four runs scored. Treacy was third out on a fly by Graves.

Duffy was first to the bat in the last innings, and took first on a dropped fly by Taylor, Pinkham to first on called balls Zettlein on a wild throw by Hallinan, Duffy scoring; McAtee hit a safe fair foul near third and took first, King out on a fly by Grant, Pinkham getting home; Hodes hit safe to short field, but Hallinan, handling nicely, succeeded in running Zettlein out at third. Wood was third out, on a foul fly by Foley.

The one in the first innings was secured through Duffy's dropping Hallinan's fly and Simmons' similar treatment of Foley's. The two in the second innings resulted from Pinkham's muffing Reid's grounder. Grant opened the fifth innings by going out on a foul bound to Hodes. Reid second out on a fly by Treacy. Reynolds hit safe for first base, got to second and third on a fearful wild pitch of Zettlein's and home on Hallinan's hot bounder to left field. Hallinan was third out, coming to grief at second by Hodes' pretty throw to Wood. Graves was first to the bat in the seventh innings, and went out on a foul bound to Hodes. Atwater tipped up to Foley, fly to Zettlein, who muffed it, and "the Little Red" got to first. Grant hit safe to right field, and taking first, sent Atwater to third. Reid's short bounder was carelessly attended to by Duffy, who let it go by him, scoring Atwater and Reid; a wild throw sent Grant on to third on this miserable play. Hallinan gave Duffy a fine chance to redeem himself, but fed fumbling the ball, letting Grant home. Tanner closed the innings by sending to Foley. The Whites improved in their play during the last two innings, and prevented their opponents scoring additional runs. The score:—

ATHLETIC vs. PICKED NINE.

A fine game took place in Philadelphia on May 1st, when the Athletics, with Flowers acting as short stop, and Radcliffe as catcher, in the absence of Malone, played and defeated a very strong nine, selected from the Experts, Olympics and Nationals of that city, with the assistance of Bechtel, the tenth man of the Athletics, as pitcher. Only four errors of fielding marked the play, and those were equally divided. The following was the score:—

TRENTON vs. ATHLETIC.

The Trenton (N. J.,) Club, opened the season on May 3d, on their grounds, with the Athletics, of Philadelphia. The Trentons were short two men, Howell, s s, and Storer, 1st b; the Athletics of one, Malone, c. The fielding of both clubs was excellent, but the batting on the part of the Trentons was not up to their usual standard. See score below:—

THE FOREST CITY CLUB, OF ROCKFORD.—Mr. Waldo, writing from Rockford, says:—"The Forest City Club desires to change the time and course of their route made out at the convention in March, as follows:—Chicago, May 22d, at Chicago; Kekionga, 23d, at Ft. Wayne; Forest City, 24th, at Cleveland; Haymakers, 27th, at Troy; Boston, 29th, at Boston; Harvard, 30th, Boston; Mutuals, June 1st, at New York; Atlantic, 2d, at New York; Stars, 3d, at New York; Athletics, 5th, at Philadelphia; Nationals, 6th, at Washington; Olympics, 7th, at Washington; Baltimore, 8th at Baltimore; Neptune, 10th, at Easton, Pa.; Athletic, 12th, at Philadelphia; Mutuals, 14th, at New York; Chicago, 17th, at Chicago. The above route, of course, is to be subject to such changes to be made so as not to conflict with arrangements made by any of the clubs named in the list.

THE ECKFORDS PRACTICING.—On April 29th and May 1st the Eckfords played two remarkable games with junior nines, and, though they were minus the services of Shelly and Holdsworth in both contests, they easily "Chicagoed" their opponents, as will be seen by the appended scores:—

MUTUAL VS. WARREN.—The Mutuals played another of their series of practice games with the juniors on May 2d, their opponents being the Warren Club. The boys were short handed, and so the professionals knocked them out of time to the tune of 47 to 3. Neither McCormack, Dehlman nor Gordon played with the Warrens. The game opened with a score of 11 to 1. The score:—

INNINGS.	1st	2d	3d	4th	5th	6th	7th	8th	9th

SHARING GATE MONEY.—The proprietors of the Union and Capitoline grounds in Brooklyn have agreed to demand one third of the net proceeds of every match game as their share of gate money, leaving the local clubs to make what arrangements they like with visiting clubs. The Boston, Olympic, Athletic, Haymakers, and the Western clubs work in harmony together on the question of terms, and should the Mutuals and Eckfords insist upon the demands they have made, which broke off their matches with the Boston nine in this city, there will probably be but few games played in Brooklyn this season, on the Union ground.

AQUATICS.

THE AMERICA CUP.

MR. ASHBURY'S INTENTIONS—ACTION OF THE NEW YORK YACHT CLUB.

At the annual dinner of the Harwich, Eng., Yacht Club, on April 18th, Mr. Ashbury, in responding to the toast of his health, made a speech to the following effect:—

He was engaged in friendly controversy with the Americans, the question being whether, in the contest known as the America Cup, he should sail against one vessel or against a fleet. By a deed of gift the New York Club were bound to send a champion vessel and not a fleet, and his construction was supported by opinions taken both in this country and in the states. The Commodore of the New York Club took the opinion of three eminent judges and the only surviving donor of the cup, and their reply was that the intention was that the New York Club should send a single vessel and not a fleet, and it was said that the object of inserting the clause requiring six months' notice in the deed was that, in the event of their believing a foreign yacht was coming which was too powerful for any vessel they had to compete with, they might build a yacht on purpose. But the lawyers differed on both sides of the water, so that he should not go so much on the legal interpretation as the spirit and intention, and should request the New York Club to refer the point at issue to Judge Sprague, and the surviving donor, and he would accept their decision, whatever it might be. If it should be decided that he had to sail against a fleet, there was more re sonable probability of the cup coming back to England than there was last year, for then he was over in summer, when light winds prevailed in the inland waters in which the racing took place, and he had only one chance, being the representative of only one club—the Royal Thames. But he was happy to say he had already received certificates from eight of the most important clubs in England and Ireland, appointing him their representative in American waters, and the consequence would be that although a fleet would be sent against him he should have a more powerful vessel, and instead of one chance should have eight, and the time of year, instead of summer, when light winds prevailed, would be January, when the small yachts would stand no chance, and if the large vessels were out it would be a time race, and the Livonia, though not coming in first, might win by time. He should not like to be too sanguine about bringing the cup home, but, having elements and ill health, he had made up his mind to go to New York, give the six months' notice, send certificates from eight important clubs, and leave no stone unturned to bring back the cup which was held as a challenge, not against England, but the world at large.

He also stated that it was his intention to present to the Royal Harwich Yacht Club, as a challenge prize, the piece of plate, value £250, which he had won in the Ocean Race with the Dauntless. He proposed that the cup should become absolutely the private property of any individual yacht owner, but should be held ex officio by the Commodore of the club, the representative of which had won it. A six months' challenge must be given by some club, and at the expiration of that time the representative vessel of the challenging club would sail against the vessel chosen by the club then holding the cup to represent it, the course being either triangular, each side of the triangle being 15 miles long, or 30 to windward; the winner of the best two out of three being the victor. He excluded the Americans from competition, for they had one cup now, and if this were open to them they would move heaven and earth to secure it, and once over the other side of the Atlantic God only knew when it would go back again.

Important action, which will, we think, be the means of settling the question heretofore at issue between Commodore Ashbury and the New York Club, was taken at a meeting of the latter on May 8th. The following preamble and resolutions were offered by Mr. Sylvanus J. Macy:—

Whereas, At a meeting held March 24th, 1870, the New York Yacht Club acted according to their interpretation of the letter of trust donating the America's cup to the care of the club, and

Whereas, Mr. G. L. Schuyler, the sole survivor of the donors, published the original letter of trust and fully expressed the views of the donors thereof; be it therefore

Resolved, That the New York Yacht Club hereby accept Mr. Schuyler's interpretation of the deed of trust, and that we will not on one or more representative vessels against the same number of foreign challenging vessels.

Seconded and carried unanimously.

Vice-Commodore Douglass offered the following resolution:—

Resolved, That, in view of the arbitrary system of the Royal Thames Yacht Club and other foreign measurements, and its unfairness when applied to the American model, a committee be appointed by the New York Yacht Club to communicate with all foreign yacht clubs with a view to open negotiations in regard to the adoption of some impartial basis of measurement for international races, to apply to both keel and centre-board vessels.

Seconded and carried. The chair appointed Messrs W. P. Douglas, Anson Livingston and S. J. Macy as such committee.

HARVARD REGATTA.—The annual spring regatta of the Harvard College club came off on the Charles river, on April 29th, consisting of four races. The first for double sculls, was contested by G. H. Gould and H. St. John Smith, in a shell, against A. Tucker and R. S. Russell, in a lapstreak. The latter crew rowed over the short mile course in six minutes and thirty seconds, winning the race by nine seconds. The second race, for single sculls lapstreaks, was pulled by A. Rotch against E. L. Parks. The former won by sixteen seconds, in seven minutes and thirteen seconds. The third race was for single sculls, John Trowbridge and R. S. Russell entered for this race, but owing to an accidental foul the time was not taken, though the cup was awarded to Mr. Russell. The fourth race was for six-oared boats. There were only two entries for this race also—the crews being made up by drawing, as follows:—R. S. Russell (stroke), J. O. Shaw, S. M. Pitman, G. M. Garland, —— Devens, T. S. Miller (bow), F. A. Ymaga (stroke), A. Tucker, W. J. Lloyd, T. B. Walker, G. H. Gould, H. St. John Smith (bow). The race was won by the latter crew in six minutes and eight seconds. The first crew withdrew from the race at the stakeboat, owing to the mistake of their bow in trying to turn the stake from the wrong side. The prizes were a silver cup for the first and a pewter for the second in the first two races; for the six-oared race there was only one prize—a pewter mug. The judges were W. T. Sanger, George Bass and W. A. Bell.

The Memphis Races.

The Spring Meeting of the Memphis Jockey Club was inaugurated on Tuesday, April 24th, under rather unfavorable auspices, the weather being very unpleasant and those who attended having their ardor dampened by the falling rain. It was thought that this would cause a postponement of the opening, but such was not the case, the races set down for that day being decided. As the storm continued throughout the night, it was decided to defer Wednesday's events until the following day. On the 27th, the weather was still disagreeable, the wind blowing akin to a gale; the gathering of spectators, however, was large. The two succeeding days of the meeting were fine and the racing gave the fullest satisfaction to the numbers who journeyed to the course. We are unable, owing to the pressure upon our columns, to give more than summaries of the several events:—

Racing and Trotting Notes.

Senator Genet is driving his famous black gelding, General Butler, on the road this season. He is looking magnificently, and apparently retains his fine turn of speed. His owner does not intend to train him again for the trotting track, as he has already made so brilliant a record. Lady Thorn is at present located at Charles Hentzel's Central Avenue Hotel, close to Fleetwood Park, and despite the many unfavorable rumors of her being hopelessly lame, good judges and able horsemen who have seen her, maintain that she will continue to retain her claim to the sovereignty of the trotting turf this season. Time will show which party is correct in their judgment. General Abe Buford has purchased the three year old colt Antidote, by Jack Malone, dam Anodyne by Albion, of his breeder, Gen. W. G. Harding, for $2,000. Antidote has never shown in public, but rumor speaks highly of his beauty and racing merits. The entries for the $5,000 purse for one mile heats, for all, which is to be run on the 9th inst. over the Pacific Race Course, Alameda, closed with eight entries, comprising the most celebrated racers in the Golden State. The renowned Norfolk has three entries, Norfolk, Jr., Norfolk and Norfolk Maid; Lodi, Norfolk's great rival, has two, Oliver Cromwell and Primero; Rideman has two, Nell Flaherty and Al. Bascombe, and Melbourne one, Demorrest. This race is creating great excitement among the turfmen of the Golden State. Mr. W. Durfee, of this city, has purchased the dam of Mambrino Bertie (recently bought by Mr. Robert Bonner) of Mr. G. W. Ogden, Bourbon county, Ky., for $3,500. She is by Mambrino Chief, dam Fairy by Telegraph, and for $2,000 more was offered a weanling filly out of her when he sold the dam. Mr. John K. Davis, for many years the able trainer for Col J. J. O'Fallon, of St. Louis, last fall purchased a splendid estate on Lake Crevecour, 19 miles from that city, and has constructed on it a mile race course, where he will next season train a stable of thoroughbreds. Tiny Hughes, who had charge of Athlone at Jerome Park last spring, has succeeded Mr. Davis as trainer for Col. Fallon's stable. Mr. Monroe Webb recently rode 100 miles on horseback in 4 hours 34 minutes, over the Agricultural Park, Sacramento, Cal., for a purse of one thousand dollars. He agreed to perform the feat in 4 hours and 30 minutes, and won with 16 minutes to spare. A half mile trotting track is now being constructed by a few wealthy residents of Plainfield, N. J., and will be inaugurated by a meeting during the coming summer. Work has commenced on a trotter in Sacramento, who was taken from a butcher's cart, and with two months' training trotted the first half mile in 1:07, and repeated in 1:07¾; at least, so says the Sacramento Reporter. He is known as the Stanford horse, a gentleman of that name having purchased him for $3,900, and he now asks $10,000 for him. His previous owner bought him out of the butcher's cart for $150. They ought to bring him cast, and if he can trot as fast on our Long Island tracks, Mr. Bonner will not hesitate to pay the price demanded for him. The irrepressible Kentucky breeder, L. L. Dorsey, is out with a challenge offering to trot his four year old colt by Goldsmith, out of a Ruric mare, against either of the five year olds, Aberdeen or Blackwood, on even terms, in harness, at mile heats, three in five; two mile heats, and three mile heats for $500 a side each race, play or pay, on half mile tracks; the races to be trotted in October and November next at a place half way between Louisville and New York. As both Capt. Ryder's horse, Aberdeen, and Mr. Steele's Blackwood are at the stud, it is very improbable they will match them from such profitable business to trot three races for $1,500 only.

SPRING TROTTING MEETINGS.—We are in receipt of a number of programmes of trotting meetings to be held this spring in various sections. The Niles City, Mich. Association meeting commences on the 24th inst., and continues three days, when $1,250 in purses will be trotted for. On the same days, the Central Missouri Horse Association holds its first meeting at Sedalia, when $3,000 is given for eight running and trotting races. The second annual trotting meeting of the Michigan Horse Breeders' Associa ion will be held at Jackson, Mich., June 13th, and three following days, when purses to the amount of $10 000 will be offered. The newly organized Maryland Trotting Association celebrate their inaugural meeting, on their track, the Herring Run Course, at Baltimore, on May 30th and three following days, during which purses to the amount of $10,000 will be competed for by trotters of various classes of speed. The Toledo, Ohio, Driving Park Association meeting commences on July 4th and lasts four days; amount of purses offered, $10,000. The Owego, N. Y., Agricultural Society holds a four days' trotting meeting on June 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th; amount of purses offered, $2,500. The Ohio Stock Fair is held at Tiffin on June 6 h, 7th and 8th; amount appropriated, $10,000. The Cleveland, Ohio, Trotting Club holds its Spring Meeting on June 20th, 21st, 22d and 23d, and on the same days the Boston Trotting Association Meeting is celebrated on the Beacon Park, Brighton, where the purses offered amount to $16,000 in value. The Mystic Park, Boston, Spring Meeting is fixed for June 27th and three following days, when $11,500 in purses will be hung up for public competition. The Narragansett Park Spring Meeting is arranged for June 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th; amount of purses offered, $14,000. It is unfortunate that this popular meeting clashes with the Jerome Park race meeting, as many will be disappointed by their inability to witness the sports at both places. The Fleetwood Park meeting, which is the first held this season, commences on the 15th inst., and the Prospect Park Pair Grounds Association have fixed on the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th June for their spring gathering; the amount of purses given at the former meeting being $13,900, and at the latter $5,000. It will be seen that the cream of fast trotters will have plenty of opportunity of winning money with their flyers during the coming season.

RACERS FROM THE SOUTH.—Col. Tom Patterson arrived here last week from New Orleans, with Mr. W. Cottrill's Mobile stable of horses, and will train at the Long Branch Course, N. J. His string comprises Frank Ross, 3 yrs., a chestnut colt by Daniel Boone, dam Signita, who is engaged in the Belmont Stakes at Jerome Park and the Kenner and Travers Stakes at Saratoga, and has been heavily backed for the first named event; Saucebox, 3 yrs., a chestnut filly by Star Davis, dam Skeedaddle, who has several engagements at Long Branch, and Billy Williamson, 3 yrs., a chestnut colt by Daniel Boone, dam Corinne, who has no engagements. Frank Ross is a big, fine looking colt, fully 16 hands high, and in the only race he ran at New Orleans was only beaten a head by his stable companion, Billy Williamson, in a fast run race; the stable declaring to win with the latter. Saucebox was bred by Mr. John M. Clay, and Mr. Cottrill purchased her this spring for $7,000. She ran five times last fall, winning three, and being second to Hollywood when only half prepared in the other two races. Defender, the four year old colt, by John Morgan, dam Cinthonia, purchased by John Morrissey at the recent New Orleans meeting for $4,000, has arrived at the Patterson Course in charge of the steeple chase jockey, Hugh Gaffney. It is probable he will go into Dr. Weldon's stable to be trained.

TROTTING MATCH.—The challenge of Mr. Geo. A. Ferguson, of this city, to trot his grey horse Cloudman against any horse in the world has been accepted by the well known trainer John Lovett, who has matched his gelding Johnny Reb against him for $1 000 a side, in a race of mile heats, best three in five, to go as they please, to come off on the Fleetwood Park course on Wednesday, the 24th instant. Cloudman is known to be a horse of extraordinary speed, but his nervous and excitable disposition has hitherto rendered him valueless for the road or the trotting track, and was the cause of his late owner, Mr. Edwin Thorne, selling him to his present proprie or, Mr. Ferguson. In the hands of this latter able horseman, Cloudman has wonderfully improved in steadiness and docility, and can be driven with safety on the road. The race now made will test his adaptability for the track.

Racing at Epsom.

We herewith present details of the running in the contests for the Great Metropolitan Stakes and the City and Suburban Handicap at Epsom, Eng., on April 18th and 19th respectively:—

THE GREAT METROPOLITAN STAKES (Handicap) of 25 sovs. each, 15 ft, and only 5 if declared, with 200 added; the second received 50 sovs. out of the stakes; winners extra; about two miles and a quarter; 74 subs, 37 of whom paid 5 sovs each.

G. G. Keene's ch c Captivator, by Consolation out of Miss Hawthorne, 4 yrs, 8st 6lb..... Fordham 1
Mr. Thomas' Elleron, 4 yrs, 7st 9lb..... F. Webb 2
Mr. Payne's Jester, 5 yrs, 7st (last 5lb extra)..... W. Gray 3
J. Smith's Whimsical, 4 yrs, 8st 11lb..... Osborne 0

Ten others started. Betting—5 to 1 against Jester, 100 to 12 against Jester, 7 to 1 against Phosphorus, 8 to 1 against Revoke, 9 to 1 against Captivator, 100 to 7 against Whimsical, 100 to 6 against Ourogan II, 25 to 1 each against Feasiless and Elleron, and 50 to 1 against the Revellee colt. Captivator was in front for a few strides, when the Revellee colt rushed to the head of affairs, followed by Haldee, Judge, Penniless, Whimsical and Phosphorus. Next to these laid Elleron, Captivator and Capitaliste, on the outside, with Free Trade and Ourogan II whipping in to the turn out of the straight, when the Revellee colt ran wide, and was passed by Judge and Whimsical, Phantom lying fourth and Phosphorus fifth, with Haldee, Revoke and Captivator heading the remainder, of whom the absolute last was Jester. Rounding the loop Whimsical deprived Judge of the command, with Phosphorus the Revellee colt, Elleron, Haldee and Revoke pursuing them in a cluster, until entering the Old Course, when Phosphorus began to drop back, and by Captivator drawing into the rack, Penniless and Jester were left a long way astern. At the mile post the Revellee colt again got his head in advance of Whimsical and Judge, and in another quarter of a mile the favorite began to compound, leaving Free Trade, Elleron, Phantom and Revoke in attendance on the brace of light weights, until they commenced the descent. The Revellee colt was then in difficulties, and Elleron came round Tattenham Corner with about a neck the best of Whimsical, Revoke following between the pair, with Phantom and Free Trade struggling on to the road, where they were disposed of. Thence Elleron and Whimsical were very hard pressed by Revoke to the distance, when Captivator made his appearance on the outside, and at once placed the issue beyond doubt, as while the others were hammering along, Fordham was holding his horse well in hand. As soon, therefore, as Captivator was let out opposite the Stands, he quickly drew Elleron, and won by a quarter of two lengths, while Jester, who recovered more than a hundred yards by his gameness in the last half mile, made a dead heat for third place with Whimsical, a length behind Elleron. Introductory Overture.

MONDAY, May 8th, '71.

THE CAR TRAGEDY, a fearful and absorbing act, has been the engrossing topic of conversation since our last, very few works of fiction on the mimic stage displaying such a forcible disre gard of human life as that exhibited by the assassin of the down-town merchant. We witness in theatrical representations nearly every phase of murder, for motives of various kinds; yet here, in real life, in our own most traveled thoroughfare, murder most foul has been done upon the head of an unoffending citizen, whose only offence seems to have been his efforts to protect ladies from insult. Truly, truth is stranger than fiction, but vengeance seems to be following swift upon the trail of blood, and the probabilities are that between the cruel murder of the victim and the taking off of the assassin, the time will be short, sharp, and decisive....One of the most successful revivals this season has been that of "The Liar," at Wallack's Theatre, the large audiences who have witnessed its representations being very enthusiastic and demonstrative in their approval. Is this because "a fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind"?.....The circus companies are all fairly on the wing, several of the best of them hovering around New York, and giving exhibitions to large assemblies of the denizens of our suburban towns, principal among them being Howe's Great London Circus, which is showing in Hoboken, Forepaugh's and other minions of the Spanish domain. The manager, having heard such glowing accounts of the tenting business hereaway, determined to try the thing this season, and by this time he knows Howe it is himself. [All this rigmarole is gone through with merely to give us a chance to get in this little rag, which isn't much after all.—ED.].....Mr. Spencer brothers must be very powerful men, for they bear the weight of the globe upon their shoulders, and a stout Hart encourages them in their arduous undertakings. Mr. Hart is one of the most efficient managers of the Globe Theatre, and Hart is their stage manager. We make this explanation to save the time of our invaluable readers in their fruitless efforts, unaided, to discover the point. Excuses moi.—ED.)..... The late "Richard III" from the original text, which did not gain much applause from the audiences, reminded us of a badly made counterfeit, because it was so rudely stamped.".....We once knew a very bad actor, whose name was Baldy Janvers; Baldy was so distressingly poor in his humble assumption of character that he was at last compelled to give up the stage and join church. For a while the old thing worked well with him, and he throve within the gospel fold. But "Time Tries All," we are told, and Baldy, in an evil hour, went back on the church, and slouched around like a reformed rum seller who had just been released from prison and was glad to get among his old chums once more. He was led to see the error of his ways again, and he was once more made as good as new, and received among the meek and lowly brethren. But Baldy was unstable—he would march along under the gospel banners for a while, then he would become a backslider, and revel in the green room or play high Jack at the corner grocery. This little game continued for some time, until at last the dear brethren got tired of this open and shut arrangement, and some of them made up their minds to no longer strive with Baldy's evil spirit; but wiser counsels prevailed when the backslider again sought the anxious bench; one more effort was made for his salvation, and they thought what a mercy it would be if Baldy should die while he was a good man, for then his soul would be saved. Well, the dear brothers and the equally beloved and pious sisters wrestled with Satan for the mastery, and at length the penitent seeker gave evidence that he had been once more blessed. "Has he got it?" asked one of the hardest workers in the divine vineyard. "Oh, yes, brother dues," replied one of the deacons, "he's all right now; his peace is made—all is well, all is well." "Well, then," responded the hard worker, "to prevent a relapse, let's knock him in the head before he falls from grace again." In two weeks from that time, before the much converted Baldy had sinned again, he was knocked in the head, a locomotive crushing in his skull as he was attempting to cross a railroad track, thereby turning over in his own mind, perhaps, the chances of another conversion should he once more go on a little bender.....We will now sing you a comic song, composed by us while on a bed of sickness, and kept on a low and unprofitable diet. Wishing to see the rays of the brilliant orb of day, we had ourself moved to the window, and there, instead of the sun, it was somebody's daughter who attracted our attention, and she is the subject of our lay:—

THE GIRL OF THE PERIOD.

On yonder sidewalk gliding
Her lithe and slender form behold;
Past her hands her sunshade hold,
Tis her firm friend of old.
Trem-ble! gallants who damsels waylay
Catch but a glance of her unyielding eye—
There'll be the deuce to pay!

If, idling at shop window,
A favored beau she chance to meet,
To creams at Maillard's stands she treat,
If he is "fast," she's "fleet."

And if a corner lounger
Should utter word of import ill,
Him she'd wallop with a will,
Though she his claret spill.

Behold her on the ar'nua,
With skill now guiding two-in-hand;
Hist! sbashed the gazers stand,
They are an awe-struck band.

At ball or concert shining,
Like star upon night's amber brow,
Beating time to music's flow,
She's in her glory now.

.....Do you pay any income tax? There is no rose without its thorn, some wide awake old pain killer has asserted, and as we rose from our liguamvitæ couch a few mornings ago, exuberant with joy at the prospect of happy returns of the day's business, praising intently the beautiful weather, we espied on an escritoire in our boudoir, a blank income document. Now we'd sooner see a ghost, any day, than one of these frightful and unconstitutional scarecrows. How this income return happened to come in, we don't know, but we are not alone in our tribulation, as you shall shortly see. A few days since, one of that class whom Sabine attempted to read out of the pale of the church as actors, called upon us, his eyes in a coarse phrenzy rolling; he is a nobby boy, and earns a fair share of the sinews by his profession. "How's this!" said he angrily, "here's a nice government, ain't it?" We bowed acquiescence. "If I have a net income of three thousand dollars, they make me pay twenty-five dollars for the thousand over the two thousand exempt; but here I've only an income of one thousand in all. Now why don't they pay me two and a half per cent. on the deficit allowed by law?" We had never seen it in this light before, and suggested that an association might be formed to test this question, whether the government could not be compelled to pay two and a half per cent. to every one whose income did not amount to two thousand dollars. Postscript.—We have since learned that this young man has been consigned to an insane asylum much against his will. Our friends will now rise while we recite an

ODE ON THE INCOME TAX.

Internal revenue, infernal revenue,
Where'er we stay you make us pay
Unto the gov. its due.
We would not pay, but then you say
You'll sue if we don't render
Up our stamps. You tender liar,
While it will be considered
Internal revenue, infernal revenue,
We would not care if you were fair,
Instead of such a "do."
But take your blanks we would, with thanks,
If from them we'd not learn
That on them we pay, nor, as you say,
Make our income return.

.....'Our Jim," who some time ago rejoined the "Wareguised tribe," is traveling through the wilds of Canada, and his tribulation in that benighted region is great. He cannot get the hang of the canucks' way of doing business, in exacting a full quid pro quo for every dime they spend. Hear what the unacclimated boy has to say:—

WINDSOR, Kanneder, Ma 11th.

DEAR ROSE.—The sh) has his goin thru Kanneder, an orfanite of Great Brittin, as I've hurd. Of the popil I hand much to as was no nor nother, but sum of em's wuse'n the ech. I never sene noboddy hoom wanted to git so much for thare munney as them. Wile we was a spendin ort our silver munny afore the war, the Kanneders was a crasein it and a sottin it down like it was preshus stuf, and it makes me mad to see our five sent bits and cimes and quarters a shinin around from hand to hand, far from the land of thare birth, wile we, boom organized it, is obleged to use ole paper mummey, wich, however, isn't bad to take when a purson isn't of a weathy stok. The bad to take when a purson isn't of a weathy stok. The "Wareagated" knox on ither shose in hel and gorn, its so morril and ellerwatin; if Barnim runs agin us hede hotter never to hav bin born, probly, becors we is over everything that ever dra the breth of life, and the pepil flox to our sho like it was the north pole or magnetix nedil hoom drors like a leech, so to spake, tumble to, to speke profeshnilly. But I had servil skumishis with sum forit-fundin buffers wich you will ortwase se in unstrilized wilages. Wun chap, with red hare and smoky les, cums up to me wile I was a sturrin up the assnermilx, and ses he, in a uncouth woise, "is this here the she ware the laffin hyesener is?" In mi most polilist wai I replide, "this is the she, betwene hoops and orl ither shose its as much diffrance as chork and chese is." "Well," ses he, "ware is the jolly littel xuss?" "That's him over tu yonder, in the corner there, by hisself." "Oh, that's the chap, is he? Well, now, make him laf." "If I freud," ses I, not wishin tu rase any trubbel, "thare is times wen he haint onto it, and orl hel couldent make him laf." "Ah hah," ses he, as if I lide, "yu and him's in tugether, I ges; gim me the pole, and if thare's anything funny inler him I'll bring it out, I bet you." "Mi freud," ses I, still manetaneing me dignerty and self possesshin, "if dismasters and afflickshins cums onto a purson he dussent fele werry laffy; if yure parsun yu was to ole, and yure bes sportits," as the poet sez, "is gone, he aint not feel like laffin, I gess, so now, hyeseners is jist like ither peopil. Altho that thare animil has ganed a grate reputashin as a laffin hyener, there is times wen he cant laf, wen his feelins wont allow of it, and this time, prosp, is sich a time." With that a spekin, with orl the attitoods put into thare rite places, crowds gatherd round us like it was pa da into the army, and the prest onto us in so wots the matter. "I don kear anything about the matter, I mean Chinaaingin me," ses this Kenedian, "all I want to no is wen is the sho, and time agoin to du it; now make that thare hyesener laf, or lie bust up the hole swindel." Wareever thare is a crowd, and yu as swindel, thale jine rite in with the man hoom is swindeld, and so it was in this here case; no sooner did he as swindel than the ither chaps, hoom had been satisfade afore, sung out, "that's so; lare the dam thing out if he dont laf." Now, urly that morain, the hyener being a littel unwell, as it were, I had given him a large dose of caster oil, wich it diddint sit putty wel onto his stummuix, and made him gripy, thus destroyin, yu wil observe, his powers of laffure. Seein that I was likely to git wursted in this angry discushin, I reasorted to a ruse and made these telling remarx:—"Mi frens—Last nite, doorin a heavy tornader, our tent was noct down bi the force of the ellerments, and Jim Bentley, hoom rased and nussed this laffin hyener from the time he was a mere infant, and hoom tended to him like he was a yumin bein, was killed by the fallin of the big senter pole onto his hed. The hyener, hoom was sita bi to Jim, wen he sene his cold and lifeless boddy a lyin afore him, with the blud a drippin from his gasly wounds, lade himself down alongside the dredful slorter and wep like a child. My frens, I ask yu, as parents, as husbinds and brothers, can yu blame that poor beest for not laffin when his spirrits is so lauserated?" Sho yer? (Grise of "No, no.") Shame upon that crooel miser hoom wood forse a laf out of a wepin suffrer." ("Shame, shame," cried the indignant croud.) And afore I cood interfeer they had seazed the (sold bobe and trampled him under thare feet like he was a wurm, and wen the felin croud had dispurst thare was nuthin left of that dredful man but his hat, orl the rest of him had been stampt into the yurth, never to rise again. But I must close for the present. Yu kin yuse this if yu want anything to fill up. Yourn til death, "OUR JIM."

City Summary.

A SUMMER SEASON WAS COMMENCED at the Theatre Comique on Monday evening, May 1st, under the management of Messrs. Butler and Gilmore. They had intended to have commenced a summer tour with their company on that date, but some little difficulty having been experienced in leasing halls in the neighboring towns in such a manner as to avoid long jumps in travel, that intention was postponed for a brief period. Having obtained a verbal promise that they could retain possession of the Theatre Comique for another month, their advertisements and bills in the usual manner for the past week's performances. On Friday and Saturday, April 28th and 29th, rumors reached the management that offers had been made to the artists engaged by them for long engagements at another theatre, and the performers were assured that the Theatre Comique would not be opened on the following Monday. Finding upon investigation that these rumors were based upon truth, Messrs. Gilmore and Butler caused an injunction to be served upon the owner of the property, and also upon the parties whom it is alleged attempted to interfere with them, restraining them from disturbing Messrs. Butler and Gilmore in their possession of the building. As the adverse parties were unable to lift the injunction the present lessees remain in possession. The only new attractions offered were Mlle Caroline, dancer, and George G. Hawtrey, a trick comedian and vocalist, the latter making his first appearance on Thursday evening. Miss Lizie Riddell has continued her serio-comic songs; Ashcroft and Morton performed a double song and dance called the "India Rubber Gal;" the ballet entitled the 'Emeralds" introduced M'lles Bertha and Caroline, and the excellent corps de ballet, and Harry Jackson performed in a protean farce called "The Heads of the People."

MISS CARRIE HAINES, of the Theatre Comique, sailed for Europe on April 29th.

AT BOOTH'S THEATRE, "A Winter's Tale" has been acted during the past week to comparatively small sized audiences. It was played at a matinee performance for the first time on May 6th.

AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE, on Monday evening, "La Perichole," was performed, and on Tuesday, "La Grande Duchesse." On Wednesday, Friday and Saturday evenings and Saturday matinee, "Le Petit Faust" was performed with M'lle Aimee for the first time in this country in the role of Mephisto. On Thursday evening, Mr. H. C. Page, the business manager, received a benefit, and made his first appearance as an actor upon the New York stage. Although Mr. Page has acted for many years in the principal cities, he had not hitherto appeared upon the stage in this city. He played Count Glorieux in the farce of "Sketches in India," supported by the cast mentioned in our past issue, to the entire satisfaction of a good sized audience which had assembled despite the severe storm that prevailed. A selection of "Barbe Bleue" was also sung, and M'lle Persini between the acts sang some operatic gems which met with favor from the audience. On Sunday the eighteenth concert of Fisk, Jr.'s Ninth Regiment Band took place, M'lle Aimee, Miss Nully Pieris and J. Levy assisting. The present week will be the last of the opera bouffe season.

THE METROPOLITAN JOB PRINTING COMPANY, whose offices have been located in the old Herald building, at the corner of Nassau and Fulton streets, since the year 1838, are about to remove their quarters to the present Herald building, at the corner of Broadway and Ann street, where they have secured large and comfortable apartments, alterations for which are being made to their present premises. The business of this company is extensive, among which lithographic printing may be mentioned as a special feature. On reference to our advertising columns full particulars may be ascertained.

MR. HURLBURT'S COMEDY entitled "Americans at Paris" was revived at Wallack's Theatre on Monday evening last, and in conjunction with "The Liar" held the boards throughout the entire week. It had been so recently played here that it is not necessary to recite its story. Its dialogue is sprightly, and many of its situations are very comical, yet it must be admitted that the success it achieved during the week was in a great measure owing to the efforts of the excellent artists to be found in the cast. Mr. John Gilbert as Mr. Botherer was admirable. He found in that character ample scope for the display of those sterling artistic qualities which have been associated with his name during the past quarter of a century. In opposition to this character, which was full of fussy good nature and fidelity that was rather irksome, stood forth in bold relief that of Arthur Morris, an American broker, which was acted with great care by Mr. Charles Fisher, who was graceful and easy in the role. Mrs. Morris found a charming representative in Mrs. Thos. Barry. Mrs. Botherer was acted with much humor and archness by Miss Effie Germon. Messrs. Ringgold, Williamson, Rockwell and Holland were all acceptable in their various impersonations, and the bill as a whole was one of the most enjoyable of the season, as the frequent laughter and applause of the audiences fully testified. The attendance during the week was liberal. This (Monday) evening, May 8th, a comedy which has achieved marked success at the Royal Court Theatre, London, Eng., entitled "Randal's Thumb," from the pen of Mr. W. S. Gilbert, will be acted for the first time in America. We published some time since its story and the reception it met with on its original production.

T. C. DE LEON'S AMERICAN COMEDY, entitled "Pluck," has been acted to meagre audiences, at Lina Edwin's Theatre, during the past week, and was withdrawn after the performance of Saturday evening. On this Monday evening, May 8th, Miss Lina Edwin announced to make her re-appearance in a new comedy, by an author whose name has not yet been made public, entitled "Rank."

MR. E. T. STETSON and a full dramatic company will play a brief season at the Globe Theatre, commencing early in June. Charles Foster's sensational drama entitled "Neck and Neck" will be the opening attraction, which it is anticipated will run entirely from the allotted to the season.

MR. AND MRS. BARNEY WILLIAMS, with their little daughter, Marie; Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence and Olive Logan were passengers by the steamer Scotia, which sailed for Europe on May 3d.

AT BOOTH'S THEATRE, "A Winter's Tale" has been acted during the entire week past in the sensational drama entitled "Under the Gaslight," which was produced by the late lamented "Who Speaks First?" On Friday afternoon and evening Mr. Allen received a benefit. At the matinee performance, in addition to the performance of "Schneider," a large number of minstrel performers appeared—consisting of delegations from the various minstrel halls and variety theatres of the city as follows:—Neise Seymour, W. Malcolm as Minister and Dave Reed from Byrnes' Minstrels; Frank Kerns, Johnny Wild, James Cummings, T. G. Riggs, Connor and Bradley; Kitty O'Neil and Frank Girard from Tony Pastor's; Hughey Dougherty, Geo. H. Coes, James Wambold, Lew Rattler, Ashcroft and Morton from the Theatre Comique; Hart, Ryman, Barney, Rickey, James Gaynor, Bob Hall, Delehanty and Rengler from the Globe. This Monday evening, May 8th, Edmund R. Dalton is announced to make his first appearance. On Tuesday evening William Marden is announced for a benefit, Wednesday is set apart for Mr. C. Foster's benefit, Mr. J. Winter will receive a benefit on Thursday, and on Friday the annual benefit of John J. Jones is announced to occur.

BUT LITTLE CHANGE was made in the programme at Bryants' Minstrels during the week past. Those that occurred in the first part were "When the Corn is Waving," sung by Munroe Dempster; the "Power of Love," sung by D'Alberte, and 'Come where the Moonbeams Linger," by W. F. Stanley. In the second part, Dan Bryant and Dave Reed performed in "Who Died First," which was revived. The "Streets of New York," "Daniel in the Bryant's Den," the "Mac-Japs" and "Pastimes on the Levee" have been continued.

FREQUENT CHANGES in the programmes at Wood's Museum occurred during the past week. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was acted on Monday afternoon and evening. On Tuesday evening a change was made to the "Colleen Bawn," for the benefit of J. M. Ward, and the same play was acted on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. On Friday evening, Mr. W. S. Cahi'l received a benefit when "Ireland As It Was" and the "Irish Lion" were performed, which were also repeated at the matinee and evening performance of Saturday, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was acted at the other matinees. This evening, May 8th, Joseph Murphy is announced to commence an engagement, opening in "Help," which was written expressly for him by Fred. G. Maeder.

THE SATSUMA JAPANESE TROUPE closed their engagement at the San Francisco Minstrel Hall, after the performance of Saturday, May 6th. No change of importance was made in the programme during the past week, and only fair sized audiences were in attendance.

"THE CRITIC; OR, A TRAGEDY REHEARSED," has made such a genuine success at the Fifth Avenue Theatre that it was continued upon the programmes during the entire past week, where it attracted large audiences. Mr. Mathews' excellent acting of Sir Freiful Plagiary and Puff, aided by the careful attention and adaptability of the artists of the stock company to their various roles, combined to secure such a favorable result. It will be produced during the present week, and will be preceded by the comedietta entitled "Used Up," in which Mr. Mathews will act Sir Charles Coldstream, which, we believe, was his original character. "If I'd a Thousand a Year" preceded the "Critic" during the past week.

AT NEWCOMB AND ARLINGTON'S MINSTRELS a most enjoyable programme was offered during the past week. In the first part, which was entirely changed from the previous week, Mr. H. Burridge sang a new ballad, entitled "Farewell Mother," in a pleasing manner. Charley Reynolds convulsed the audience with a comic ditty called "Mrs. Grandy." D. S. Vernon, a new acquisition to the company, has a pleasing tenor voice, under good control, which was used to good effect in "Ma! Ma! Where are You Pretty Gone?" J. H. Murphy sang with effect the "Chime of the Bells." Many fresh jokes were introduced between the songs. The second part remained unchanged. In part third, Willie and Tommy sang for the first time here, "Where Flowers Blush and Bloom." Reynolds and Burridge created considerable merriment by their quaint acting in a serio comic scene called "Mack-beth." Harry Blanwood and his banjo proved an agreeable feature as did the "Peaked Bell Ringers." Charles Walters, the acrobatic song and dance man, continued to win the favor of the audience in a new act called "My Darling Mignonette," and a sketch called the "Hotel Runners" concluded the entertainment. The performances here are rapidly increasing in merit as the artists get more accustomed to each other. Further changes will be made in the programmes for the present week, and Walter Bray, a performer of excellent repute, will make his first appearance on May 8th.

MISS ANNIE HINDLE, the excellent serio-comic and character vocalist, with quick changes of costume, whose performances we have reviewed when she was performing at other halls in this city, commenced an engagement at Tony Pastor's on May 1st, and continued during the week, meeting with much favor from the audiences assembled there. In addition to her performances, Marie Gorendo, Amelia Gorendo and Helene Smith indulged in terpsichorean feats, which were graceful and varied. Frank Kerns, Johnny Wild and others performed a number of Ethiopian sketches. Cummings executed a song and dance in a clever manner. Tony Pastor re-appeared, and gave a very thrilling and artistically arranged scene, and elicited warm applause. In the dramatic part of the "Siege of Jerusalem" there is an exceedingly humorous character called Hogo, farrier of the army, in which Geo. Howard made a decided hit. His song of 'Sophia Brown' was especially good. The part of the 'Old Man of the Mountain' was commendably sustained by P. A. Anderson. His acting, where he hears of the apostacy of Almea, and his death scene, stamped him as an artist of extraordinary merit. For Sosque as Christopher Stanvitz, and Miss Isadore Cameron as Noma, the lovers, and Mrs. H. P. Grat an as the countess, prominently figured in the drama. On Monday, May 8th, Nell Warner opens an engagement in Richard III.....At the Front Street Theatre Comique an attractive programme has been presented during the week. The operatic parody upon the arrival of Nilsson, with Edwards, Hodges, Bowman, Harris, Whittaker and Dodsworth in the cast, has elicited, and been provocative of much laughter. Miss Sallie Apt has met with much favor in her soloidancy dances. The leading features of the week, however, were Miss Emma Alford in her character vocalisms, and Sidney Franks in his comic vocal entertainment. Miss Alford made a favorable impression at once, as she is pretty, piquant in style, and possessed a good voice. Her singing of a Welch ballad called forth a perfect rapture of applause. Sidney Franks is fulfilling his second engagement at the Front this season, and his success has been unqualified. Sam Devere, in his Teutonic and Ethiopian acts, is as popular as ever. The Macdougals, grotesque artists, from Dublin, is an excellent take off on the Majilions, of 'Black Crook' fame. It is done by Edwards, Hodges and Devere. The original music is performed by the orchestra, and the several feats of the Majilions are ludicrously burlesqued by the above trio. 'The Two Dromios,' another Irish sketch, is done by the same parties. An exquisitely costumed and beautiful new ballet, entitled 'The French Ballet,' by Mons. A. Blandowski, was put on this week. The costumes were furnished by Messrs. Jarrett and Palmer, of Niblo's Garden. The new and dancing and marching of the mermaids, and the scenery of ocean shells, coral groves, etc., is very creditable to all concerned. Bowman and Harris, in their song and dance, 'Apple of My Eye,' meet with an encore. The whole concludes with a new domestic drama, entitled 'The Tide of Fortune,' in which Walter Bray, Miss Isabella Mason, George Morgan, Miss Edeson, Joseph Whittaker, and others of the corps dramatic performed. The Original Japanese Troupe are announced to shortly appear.

BUSINESS AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, Omaha, Neb., during the past week has been very good, says our correspondence, the opera house on Monday and Tuesday 'Enoch Arden,' with Edwin Adams in the title role, on Wednesday 'Othello,' Edwin Adams as Iago, and Manager Stevens as Othello, in which part Mr. Stevens made a hit and gained much applause. Mr. Murdock, as Cassius, added to the good opinions he has previously won. Mr. Everett acted his part, Rodorigo, well, and got all the honor that lay in it. Mrs. Murdock as Desdemona, was graceful and winning in appearance, and Miss Gray's Amelia, was fully up to expectations and very good in every respect. On Thursday the 'School for Scandal,' with Mr. Adams as Charles Surface, Miss Gray as Lady Teazle. Messrs. M. Stevens, Murdock, Everett, Shields, E. F. Clarke, George Gaston, and Miss Carlotta, Mrs. De Bar, and Mrs. Murdock did well, to the great delight of the large audience present. Tonight 'Lucretia Borgia' 'Heart,' for Mr. Adams' benefit, and 'The Lady of Lyons,' is billed for Saturday's matinee, and at night 'Wild Oats,' with Mr. Adams as Rover, will be performed. This will close Mr. Adams' very successful two weeks' engagement. Great credit is due Manager Stevens for the great labor and care he is giving to make our pretty little theatre a profit to himself, and also the stars who may give us a call."

"THE BLACK CROOK" has been running this week at the Pittsburgh Opera House, Pittsburgh, Pa., to rather slim audiences, wrote our correspondent on May 5th:—"A number of new features have been introduced, but the attendance has materially fallen off, in spite of all the efforts of the Grists to please the public patronage. The 'Crook' will be withdrawn after this week, and Johnny Allen will commence an engagement on the 8th.....Manager Beamer closed the Fifth Avenue Opera House on the 1st. It will not be re-opened until about the middle of the present month. Mr. Beamer is now in New York securing attractions."

AT THE OLYMPIC THEATRE, St. Louis, Mo., Lotta commenced her second week, wrote our correspondent on May 5th, "to undiminished business on Monday, the 1st inst., when she appeared as May Wylderose, in Falconer's play entitled 'Heart's Ease,' which kept the boards until Thursday night, when 'Firefly' was produced. On Monday, the 8th, Mr. J. C. Campbell will appear in 'Pomp, by J. J. Ryan."

THE CHAPMAN SISTERS, with C. B. Bishop, made their second appearance this season in Savannah, Ga., on May 1st. Concerning their performances our correspondent wrote on May 4th as follows:—"The comedy of 'Kind to a Fault' was produced as the initial performance, with C. B. Bishop as Goldsworthy, in which character he was, as usual, excellent. Miss Josephine Chapman as Mrs. Drewitt, Ella as Jessie, Mrs. Chapman as Mrs. Cameron, Miss Long as Lucy, and that old but excellent stage veteran, Joe Parker, as Mr. Drewitt, were good. After the comedy, Messrs. Cooper and Fields favored the audience with an artistic double clog dance. 'Much Ado About a Merchant of Venice' concluded the evening's amusement, with C. B. Bishop as Shylock, Mrs. Chapman as Lorenzo and Ella as Bassanio. On Tuesday evening was produced the comedy of 'Checkmate' and the burlesque of 'Little Jack Sheppard.' On Wednesday, and last night of the engagement, 'Everybody's Friend' was produced, with Bishop as De Boots and Blanche Chapman as Mrs. Swandown."

AMUSEMENTS IN SACRAMENTO, CAL., and on the Pacific Slope are commented upon by our correspondent, who wrote on April 29th, as follows:—"John Wood, the favorite comedian from the California Theatre, began an engagement in this city last Monday, the 24th, under the management of Joseph Proctor. His opening bill consisted of 'Everybody's Friend' and 'Solon Shingle,' in which he personated Major Wellington De Boots in the first named piece and the title role in the second. Tuesday and Wednesday nights he appeared in the second, very enjoyable by the presentation of 'Rip Van Winkle.' Thursday night Mrs. Raymond (Miss M. E. Gordon) made her first appearance as Mary Belton in Byron's comedy of 'Uncle Dick's Darling' and as Margery in 'The Rough Diamond,' supported by Raymond as Uncle Dick and Cousin Joe. Last night (Friday) the Raymonds were to receive a complimentary testimonial benefit tendered them by leading and influential citizens of this place. 'London Assurance' was performed, John McCullough appearing as Dazzle, Mrs. Raymond as Lady Gay Spanker, Miss Sue Robinson as Grace Harkaway and Raymond as Meddle. The house was crowded by a very fashionable audience, and the entire performance was highly creditable to his several impersonations. Mr. Raymond has appeared to splendid advantage in his remarkable abilities. His rendition of Rip Van Winkle, is the best ever withessed after that of Jefferson's. Mrs. Raymond is a very pleasing actress, and her exquisite toilet has been the subject of much commendation. 'Rip Van Winkle' will be performed for the last time this afternoon and evening. On Monday, May 1st, J. K. Emmet—Prince Company will open an engagement, for two nights only, in Gayler's play of that name.....Daniel E. Bandmann and wife began an engagement of one week at Piper's Opera House, Virginia City, Nev., on the 26th inst. 'Narcisse' was performed, followed by 'The Lady of Lyons' on Thursday night. The business was good. 'Frits,' Emmet, is to appear May 4th in his specialty.....Marietta Ravel closed her engagement at the Salt Lake City Theatre on the 22d inst.....McKee Rankin and Kitty Blanchard were at last accounts still at Denver, Colorado Ter., giving occasional performances.....F. M. Bates and wife have relinquished their lease of the Oro Fino Theatre at Portland, Oregon, for the present, and are now in San Francisco. On the 21st inst. Miss Nellie Cummings took a benefit, and the past week was devoted to benefits of the stock members. Nickerson's Variety Troupe has been doing a good business. Cora La Mond, the female magician, was shortly to appear.....'Prof.' Hager is going to humbug the people of Marysville with his 'National Allegory' on Monday, May 1st.....The Carandini Operatic and Ballad Troupe gave a concert in San Jose last night and announce a repetition on May 1st.....Prof. Silvester and Miss Angelique Schott have been doing a good business at the Merced Theatre, Los Angeles.....Mrs. F. W. Lander (Miss Jean Davenport) is in this city on a visit to some friends. Manager Proctor is negotiating for her appearance at an early day."

CONCERNING THEATRICALS in Baltimore, Md., our correspondent wrote as follows, under date of May 5th:—"On Monday, May 1st, was produced at the Holliday Street Theatre, a historic and spectacular drama by Jos. C. Foster, Esq., entitled 'The Siege of Jerusalem; or, the Old Man of the Mountain.' It is legendary, historical and romantic, and the time of its action was in 1189, and the third crusade, under Richard Cœur de Lion of England and Phillip of France. During the reign of these sovereigns the power and prestige of Saladin was overthrown, the banner of the Crescent was supplanted by that of the Cross, and the Holy City, after years of warfare, was finally surrendered to the Christian Knights. Sir Walter Scott, in his story of the Talisman, threw around the historic incidents connected with the third Crusade, a halo of fascinating romance in his description of Hassan, surnamed the 'Old Man of the Mountain,' and one whom the Moslems held in superstitious awe. This is one of the leading characters in the drama, the characters of Richard of the Lion Heart; Phillip, King of France; Saladin; Conrad, King of Jerusalem; Archbishop of Tyre; and Miss Isadore Cameron as Noma, the lovely, and Mrs. H. P. Grat an as the countess, prominently figured in the drama. On Monday, May 8th, Nell Warner opens an engagement in Richard III.....At the Front Street Theatre Comique an attractive programme has been presented during the week. The operatic parody upon the arrival of Nilsson, with Edwards, Hodges, Bowman, Harris, Whittaker and Dodsworth in the cast, has elicited, and been provocative of much laughter. Miss Sallie Apt has met with much favor in her soloidancy dances. The leading features of the week, however, were Miss Emma Alford in her character vocalisms, and Sidney Franks in his comic vocal entertainment. Miss Alford made a favorable impression at once, as she is pretty, piquant in style, and possessed a good voice. Her singing of a Welch ballad called forth a perfect r ences. The piece was well put on the stage and the performance went off most creditably, Miss Ada Monk as Topsey, Little Nelly Center as Eva, and Harry Hawk as Marks, being most deserving of praise. Robert McWade opens on the 8th inst. in his version of "Rip Van Winkle." The double baby, or two headed child, will be on exhibition here after the 15th inst.

CONCERNING AMUSEMENTS IN CHICAGO, ILL., we have information from our correspondent, dated May 8th, as follows:—"The second week of Mr. John E. Owens' engagement at McVicker's Theatre opened with the domestic drama of 'Self' and the roaring farce "The Live Indian.' In the personation of John Unit Mr. Owens displayed his usual dramatic ability. The support rendered the star in each of the above plays by Messrs. Stanley and Haight, Mrs. Mary Myers, Mrs. Kemble, and the other principal members of the company was anexceptionable. The last week of the season will be devoted to the production of 'Paul Pry' and 'Live Indian' were produced last evening, and will hold the boards the rest of the week. Lotta opens on the 8th for a season of three weeks. At the expiration of Lotta's engagement the theatre will be torn down and a new and elegant structure will be built in its place.....Colonel Wood has again taken possession of the museum, and intends to open with a new company on the 1st of June. He has gone east to select a company and get fresh attractions for the Museum department.....The celebrated Ravel Martinetti pantomime troupe gave their initial performance at the Opera House on the 1st inst. for a season of two weeks, and were greeted by a fair audience. The performance commenced with the familiar pantomime 'Jocko; or the Brazilian Ape,' which was followed by a ballet divertissement styled 'Nymphs' Holiday,' then classic groupings by the Martinettis. The child artist Ignacio Martinetti in his specialties, was unapproachable, while the whole concluded with 'The Mystic Gift,' a pantomime which was especially pleasing, as it showed the company to excellent advantage. Paul Martinetti's personation of Jocko has won a deserved fame second only to Gabriel Ravel in the same part. The other members of the troupe are deserving of more than a passing notice for their really excellent acting. 'Harvest Home' and 'Mirza' were splendidly enacted last night and will constitute the bill the rest of the week.....Mr. J. W. Blaisdell, with Messrs. F. L. Keller, E. R. Sorgs, Chas. Rogers, J. Howard Rogers, J. L. Lacey, and G. Worvel, Misses Katie Mayhew, Grace Courtland, Annie Williams, Jessie Rogers and Mrs. J. H. Rogers opened in South Bend, Ind., on the 2d inst., for three nights, after which they take in some of the Illinois towns, travel a few weeks only. The Ticket of Leave Man' and 'Hidden Hand' are embraced in their repertoire..... Mrs. Octavia Allen, assisted by Messrs. Owen Fawcett, C. H. Wilson, R. C. White, H. A. Wentworth, E. S. Marble and P. J. Wade, Mrs. C. Stoneall, Misses Susie Oliver and Emma Marble, opened in Oshkosh, Wis., with the 'Rose of Killarney,' 'Seven Ages,' by Fawcett, and "My Neighbor's Wife,' on the 2d inst., remaining five nights. They open in Green Bay on the 8th.....Miss Katie Putnam will commence a summer engagement at Hooley's Opera House on June 11th, with her own company, to be engaged for the vacation. Miss Putnam left the city yesterday, accompanied by her agent, J. Edwin Brown, en route to Denver City."

A. W. PURCELL produces his new military drama entitled "The War for the Union; or, The Heroine of Manassas," under the auspices of the Knight Post of G. A. R., for one week in Brooklyn, Pa., commencing May 8th.

A NEW MILITARY DRAMA, in five acts, entitled "Our Female Volunteer," written by Dr. Homer Jennings, of Bridgeport, Conn., is to be played under the auspices of Post 3, G. A. R., in that city, for one week, commencing May 8th. Mrs. Kady Brownell, who was a regularly enlisted volunteer in the Union army, and who is the only female member of the G. A. R., will appear in the leading character.

AT THE CALIFORNIA THEATRE, San Francisco, Cal., on April 29th, Mr. J. K. Emmet made his last appearance for the present, wrote our correspondent on April 30th, adding:—"For a brief season of eleven nights he was a popular success. By the force of his vigorous bounds and the melody of his music upon the mouth harmonicon, which to assure you is a most impressive instrument, he clutched with a single grasp both fame and fortune. On the 26th, Mr. Emmet was unable to appear, and instead of the sensational scenery dignified with the name of 'Frits' being placed on the stage, 'Camille' was brought out without rehearsal or special preparation. It was very well acted under the circumstances, with the following cast:—Camille, Miss May Howard; Mme. Prudence, Mrs. Judah; Nanine, Mrs. E. J. Buckley; Nichette, Minnie Walton; Armand Duval, James Carden; Mons. Duval, S. W. Lacey; De Varville, W. A. Mestayer; Gustave, Edmund Leathes; Gaston, E. J. Buckley. During the forthcoming week a lady amateur is to flash down upon us as a tragic star. In private life she is a Mrs. C. V. D. Hubbard, but on the stage, in its wealth of romance, deigns to receive on her own account the name of Mrs. McCullough says she is possessed of genuine talent, and has for a long time been studied under the training of the experienced veteran, W. H. Bedley Smith. On Monday, May 1st, she is to act Bianca, 'Fazio;' on Tuesday, Lady Macbeth, in 'Macbeth;' on Wednesday, Nell Gwynne, in 'Court and Stage;' on Thursday, Marianna, in the 'Wife,' and on Friday the character of Constance, in 'The Love Chase.' She is doing pretty well for an amateur, I think. On Monday, May 8th, Mrs. F. W. Lander will commence an engagement, appearing as Elizabeth, and will be followed two or three weeks thereafter by Mr. Edwin Adams.....Maguire's Opera House will open its doors May 1st, for the commencement of the pantomime season. 'Wee Willie Winkle' and 'The Blind Mice' are to be produced, with new scenery, tricks and transformations. Among these who will figure in the entertainments are the Lopez family of pantomimists and gymnasts, the Hernandez people, and Mlle. Marie Gaugain, danseuse.....At the Metropolitan Theatre the Opera Bouffe Troupe repeated 'Orpheus' a number of times during the week, changing the bill only on the 26th, when three little sparkling pieces were produced for the first time in this city, respectively entitled 'Marriage with Coercion,' 'Jeanette's Wedding' and 'The Weak Side,' 'La Grande Duchesse,' which was given two weeks ago 'positively for the last time in California,' is announced by 'particular request' to be reproduced on May 1st. It is announced also, that 'L'Oeil Crevre,' 'The Busted Eye,' will positively be performed May 8th. 'La Belle Helene' and 'La Perichole' are in rehearsal.

At the Alhambra Theatre the combination performing at Hooley's Opera House, Chicago, is to be strengthened this week by the engagement of Eddie Carroll. The new programme will introduce Emerson in song and dance, Vivian in lightning changes, Jas. Collins and Martha Wren in characteristic sketches, Dick Carroll in 'My Father Sould Charcoal' and the Kline La Favre, in statuary acts and Can-can dancing. Now is the particular star at the Bella Union Theatre..... Prof. Hanmayer, with his performing mice, closed a season of two weeks at Platt's Hall, April 29th, and ends making a tour of the interior, visiting Stockton, Sacramento, Marysville, San Jose, etc.....Nilsson's agency arrived overland on the 27th, and is now arranging matters for a series of concerts here in the latter part of May.....During the week Mr. and Mrs. Frank Rea left town for Virginia City, being under special engagement to support J. K. Emmett at Piper's Opera House.....Bandmann and Sherry Corbyn have been using not over friendly language towards each other, couched in the form of newspaper cards. The trouble is all about money relations. Just as Bandmann was leaving his hotel last Monday, en route for Virginia City, where he was under engagement to appear at Piper's Opera House, he was arrested at the instance of Corbyn, for alleged debt. Bandmann, on making certain representations to the magistrate, was discharged from custody, and took his departure next morning for Virginia City, leaving behind, for publication, a card setting forth alleged facts, showing Corbyn's claim to be 'founded on pure fiction.' Corbyn retorts that Bandmann owes him over $2,000, the same being per centage on engagements which he (Corbyn) secured to Bandmann in London, during 1867, when Bandmann was unknown to fame or fortune. And so the matter stands.....Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Bates are now in this city, having returned from a prolonged tour of Oregon and British Columbia.....J. K. Emmet presented the Rev. Dr. Cox, of this city, with a valuable tea service, made to order at a cost of one thousand dollars. Dr. Cox performed the marriage service, some time ago, for Mr. Emmet."

FELIX A. VINCENT was playing the past week in Danville, Ill., with W. A. Rouse's dramatic company.

HENRY GREENWALL, one of the managers of the Opera House, Galveston, Texas, was the recipient of a complimentary benefit on the 26th ult., at which over 2,500 tickets were sold at $1 to all parts of the house. A correspondent informs us that "The play selected was 'Fernande,' which had held the boards the two previous nights, Miss Augusta L. Dargon appearing as Clotilde and Irving Bowers as the Commander Jarbi. Frank Evans as Pomeral, L. Davenport as Andre, Miss Frankie McClellan as Fernande, and Miss Annie Mortimer, her first appearance, as Georgette, were all excellent in their several parts and did much toward enhancing the interest of the piece, which, however, was withdrawn on Thursday night, to allow the reproduction of 'Under the Gaslight.' In response to the many calls from all parts of the house, Mr. Greenwall made his appearance before the curtain at the end of the second act, and while there was presented by Mr. Irving Bowers, on behalf of the citizens of Galveston, with an elegant diamond ring and cross, valued at $750, as a token of their regard. Friday, May 5th, is to be given, and on May 1st the benefit of Stage Manager Irving Bowers is to take place, and on May 3d Miss Augusta L. Dargon will receive a benefit."

FROM ALBANY our regular correspondent sends us the following dramatic information, dated May 6th:—"The Trimble Opera House was closed on the evening of the 1st and 3d for proper rehearsals of the grand spectacular pantomime, the 'Three Hunchbacks,' which was brought out on the evening of the 3d, with new scenery, properties, machinery and gorgeous costumes. Although the rain was pouring down in torrents, the house was crowded to repletion, as it has been the remainder of the week. This piece has proved a success peculiarly and otherwise the evening of the 3d, with new scenery, properties, machinery and gorgeous costumes. Although the rain was pouring down in torrents, the house was crowded to repletion, as it has been the remainder of the week. This piece has proved a success peculiarly and otherwise referring to Mr. Montgomery, which are inserted elsewhere.

Musical.

AT THE BROOKLYN ACADEMY the new Italian Opera company under Signor Albite's management performed for the first time on the 4th inst. The night was stormy and the house was not over half full. The tariff was high, reserved seats being two dollars, which, together with the weather, prevented any pecuniary success. The opera was Verdi's "Un Ballo in Maschera." It was tolerably well rendered, Madame Agatha States appearing in the soprano role of Amelia, and Signor Villani as Riccard. Lawrence, the English opera singer, was also in the cast. He appears to far better advantage in Italian opera than in English. Miss Grace Ridgeway, a bright Boston lass possessing a high, clear, and pure toned soprano voice, was a debutante on the occasion, and achieved quite a success. She is decidedly prepossessing in appearance, having dramatic talent promising future excellence. She divided the honors of the evening. On May 9th Miss Kellogg is to appear in "Martha" at the Brooklyn Academy, with Signor Carocelli and Miss Agnes Palmer.

ALFRED MORGAN, second violin and E flat alto player, whose address find elsewhere, can be engaged.

JOS. BRISTOL, cornet player and snare drummer, advertises that he can be engaged.

TAYLOR'S ENGLISH QUARTET, just arrived in this country, are prepared to negotiate with first class managers through their agent, James Taylor. See advertisement.

THE LAST OF THE SERIES OF PLYMOUTH CHURCH ORGAN CONCERTS took place on the 6th inst., at which music was discoursed by Messrs. Geo. F. Bristow, Geo. W. Morgan and Samuel P. Warren on the organ, and Mrs. Genevieve Hoyt and William S. Leggat vocalty.

MASTER CHARLES DRAN gave a concert on the 2d inst., at Mercantile Library Hall, Philadelphia, which was attended by a large audience. Master Dean had the assistance of Messrs. Frank Gilder, H. R. Barnhurst and H. Simon.

SIGNOR ALFISI, assisted by amateurs, gave a concert at Melodeon Hall, Cincinnati, on May 4th.

MISS JULIA RIVE, pianist, made her debut, in concert, at Hopkins' Hall, Cincinnati, on the 2d. She is a daughter of Madame Caroline Rive, a teacher of vocal music in that city.

SANFORD'S OPERA HOUSE, Philadelphia, Pa., is advertised to rent for five weeks from June 5th.

THE ARCH STREET OPERA HOUSE, Philadelphia, Pa., can be rented from May 22th. For particulars address Messrs. Simmons and Slocum, as per advertisement.

THE BERGER FAMILY, Swiss Bell Ringers, are reported to be meeting with considerable success in the towns along the Missouri river. They were at Leavenworth, Kan., on the 1st, 2d and 3d inst., St. Josephs, Mo., 4th, 5th and 6th, and are billed for Brownville, Neb., 8th and 9th; Nebraska City, 10th and 11th; Plattsmouth, 12th and 13th, and Council Bluffs, Iowa, 15th, 16th and 17th. On account of the stagnation of business in Omaha, and the recent failures in the amusement line in that city, they will give it the "go by." We learn that E. P. Kendall, who has managed this troupe since their organization, will close his two years' contract with them during the coming summer, but we have no knowledge of his intentions beyond his present engagement.

A NEW SONG, "Off Like a Rocket," words and music by our contributor, Mark Quencher, can be had of Ditson & Co. See advertisement.

SPAULDING'S BELL RINGERS performed during the past week in Antwerp, N. Y., Theresa, Gouverneur, Canton, Potsdam and Ogdensburgh, and are billed to play during the present week in Prescott, Ont; Gouverneur, Brockville, Kingston, Port Hope, Belleville and Toronto.

LEM WILEY received a complimentary concert in Peoria, Ill., on May 9th. The artists will be composed entirely of resident talent, and Prof. Rinehart will be the conductor.

SEVERAL MUSICIANS are wanted for a first class minstrel troupe. Address L. Gumpert, as per card elsewhere.

Variety Halls.

AT THE WALNUT STREET THEATRE, Kansas City, Mo., the Polly Daly Minstrels are meeting with success, new and pleasing ballads being sung by Miss Daly, Celia Ifferd and Emma Morton. Hen. Mason and Sam Cook are the leaders of the ends and are applauded each evening. A. B. Kennedy is middle man. In the usual olio, Kennedy, Blake, Lizzie Lamerux and others appear in their amusing farces, etc. Prof. Goodman's imitations on the castanets and bones are excellent. Miss Elise Scott, the charming danseuse, is received with applause and her skipping rope dance is well worthy of note. Miss Ada Boshel gave a well executed song and dance also a fancy dance. "Pastimes Glances," by Geo. Wilson, was rendered in his usual fine style, receiving a double encore. The double song and dance men, Gilfoil and Rouke, during their short stay at the Walnut have made themselves favorites; their engagement closes on Saturday night next.

A very good run the past week and was withdrawn on Saturday night to make room for Hen. Mason's burlesque of "Kansas City by Gas Light," which is good, being full of local hits. Mason's John Schmidt, Celia Ifferd's Harry Burk and Kennedy's Mose, are all well sustained. The pleasing farce of the "Stage Struck Barber," in which G. W. Malmburg appears as Jerry Clip, giving some excellent imitations of Forrest, Edwin Lingard and Walter Bray, are amusing. The complimentary benefit tendered to Mr. Billy Allen, jig dancer, on April 29th, was a success. Owing to his having a sprained ankle, the great tripple jig as billed for Gilfoil, Rouke and himself was not given. So wrote our correspondent "Casca," on May 3d.

G. W. JESTER, ventriloquist, with his specialties, who is highly spoken of by the press, can be addressed care of this office. See notices in another column.

BALLET LADIES and an Irish comedian are wanted for the Opera House, Grand Rapids, Mich. See advertisement.

JOHNNY REESE, comic singer and general performer, joined the company at the Metropolitan Hall, Washington, D. C., on the 1st inst. He appeared during the week as the bone end, kept things pretty lively. It would be a novelty, however, if the end performers were of the other sex. The manager does not understand, seemingly, the public, and a constant change is what his patrons expect to see. The Claire Sisters have been in the company and have appeared mightly since last fall. One of them, I am told, has determined to become a resident of Washington, and that looks very much as though she thought of continuing her engagement for an indefinite period. Signor Farron close this week and go to Indianapolis, taking with them the well wishes of many friends.

AMONG the attractions at the Metropolitan, Indianapolis, James Vincent and Hattie O'Neill, burlesque artists; Ned Leslie, vocalist; Master Mowatt, clog; M'lle Lousiette, dancer; Charlie Benedict, song and dance; Augusta Lamers; and Rosa Lee, vocalist.

THE EAGAN FAMILY and the Lawrence troupe were the chief attractions at Tammany Hall, Bay City, Mich, during the past week.

AT THE GLOBE THEATRE, Chicago, Ill., fair houses are crowning the efforts of the new management. Miss Eva Brent is the reigning attraction, her ballads are charmingly sung, and encores are numerous. She possesses a pure soprano voice, very agreeable in quality and very elastic, the chief charm of which is its clearness and freshness. The female minstrel first part is very good and should be left as it is. Annie Williams' song and dance is cleverly done. Mollie Macey's banjo solo is only fair. Mattie Bianca's serio-comic songs are encored. M'lle Louise's floating wire act is tolerably good. M'lle Augusta's Indian club act is excellent. Gordon Bros.'s classical groupings are good. Redden's negro acts are well worked up and take well. Miss Polly Allen are announced to commence tonight.....At the Olympic Theatre the new appearance since my last comprise Miss Emma Miles, Mr. Talbot and shooting an orange from the head of Emma Miles, which is very neatly done. Clara Butler's ballads receive nightly four and encores. Frank Frayne appears as Peter in "Mr. and Mrs. Peter White," and displays some really fine acting. He is ably assisted by Miss Butler as Mrs. White. Frank Wilson, Chas. Adams, Tom Williams, Chas. Worley and Willie Maloney in minstrelisms, Annetta, Misses Eunice Dunlap, Maud Howard and Zelie Renard are respectively good in their several acts. So wrote our correspondent on May 4th.

A HALF INTEREST in the lease and fixtures of the Olympic Theatre, Chicago, Ill, is advertised for sale by the proprietors.

AT THE BALTIMORE OPERA HOUSE, Baltimore, Md., during the past week, a good bill has been distributed up for the patrons of the house, consisting of a first part female minstrel scene; Belle Graham in a Shoo Fly medley; Jessie Grecian Bend Ballet, by the whole troupe; "Appie of My Eye," by Johnny Shay and Dick Clark; Alf. Miles, song and dance; Roman and Grecian statuary, by May Le Favre, and the drama of the "Persecuted Dutchman," together with the following artists in their several specialties:—Cap and Claudia Walters, Ada Boshel, Frank Howe, Macy Rodiads, Rice and Unsworth in comic songs, repartees, and joker. Johnson and Powers closed their engagement on the 29th inst. So wrote our correspondent on May 5th.

MANNION'S MINSTRELS, Chicago, Ill., opened the past week with a benefit to Wm. Van Fleet, the business manager, and the first production of "A-Lad-In A Wonderful Lamp," arranged from the fertile brain of J. R. Kemble. The house was crowded in every part and the burlesque was played in a very smooth and even manner. It proves to be a burlesque, which Miss Grattan's burlesque, in the act, of Jonathan Wild was fairly rendered by Pete Baker. Billy Stanton was a good Joe Blinkenkip, and W. J. Rankin played Mendez better than anything he has ever appeared in at this theatre. To-night, Friday the 5th, Frank Curtis, the former comedian of this theatre, is to take a benefit, which will appear, among them James Vincent, Hattie O'Neill, W. C. Crosbie, Nellie Taylor, &c. Pete Baker and Tommy Farron close this week and go to Indianapolis, taking with them the well wishes of many friends.

THE VARIETIES, in Peoria, Ill., under the new regime, is crowded nightly with appreciative audiences. A new raised floor has been put in, and reseated throughout. The following is the troupe complete:—R. Mitzelfeld, leader of orchestra; Harry Thompson, bones; J. Buckley, tambo; Miss Mary Olive, Louisa Wells, La Belle Blanche, and Miss Maud de Lisle. So wrote our correspondent on May 3d.

AT WILD'S OPERA HOUSE, Syracuse, N. Y., Edwin Blanchard, with his performing dog, Carlo, and Gus Williams, in his capital songs and changes, still remain an attraction. Ada Wray is still retained by the management, and her songs meet with hearty encores every night. Turner and Leaster, songs and dance men; Billy Gray, comedian, and Emma Whiting, vocalist, made their first appearance here on Thursday night, and were well received. Buck and Ads Stewart are announced to appear on the 8th. So wrote our correspondent, "Cisum," on May 6th.

JAMES BERRY, Bell Graham, Wambold and De Mont are traveling with the New York Olympic Company, which is advertised to perform in Concord, N. H., May 9th.

MISS NELLIE LE CLAIR, a performer at Aimes' Varieties, Pittsburgh, Pa., was married in that city, on April 27th, to Mr. E. Sutton, at the Red Lion Hotel, by the Rev. Mr. Young.

JOHNNY MCVEIGH, Maggie Fielding, Emma De Voy, Geo. F. Moore, C. E. Dobson and Kitty Henderson, were among the attractions at Fielding's Opera House, Toledo, O., during the past week.

THE ATTENDANCE at the Alhambra, Seventh street, below Arch, Philadelphia, has been excellent during the past week. The prominent features of the programme were as follows:—The Blonde Female Minstrels, with Dick Parker and Toney Harvey on the ends, and Otto Burbank as middle man; serio-comic vocalism and the Active Girl, by Little Josey; M'lle Henrietta, in her champion jig; Dutch song and dance, by Charlie Fox; the Ethiopian interludes of "Shook, Shaken, Shook," and "Up Up De-Du-Den-Do," the performances concluding with the original "French Can-can," in which Miss Mollie Cane, M'lle Leonetta, Miss Barrown and Miss Josie Richards, the Lorettas, Miss Barrown and Miss Josie Richards, the Lorettas, Miss Barrown and Miss Josie Richards, the Lorettas

AMUSEMENTS.

C. AMORY BRUCE.

HIS CHARACTER AS AN AGENT.

THE GENERAL OPINION OF THE PRESS.

A SUCCESSFUL AVANT COURIER.—Mr. C. Amory Bruce, popularly known as ye working agent, is now stopping at the St. Lawrence Hotel. Mr. Bruce is a high toned gentleman, and is known as one of the most energetic agents and reliable business managers in the profession, and the acknowledged model advertiser. Mr. Bruce formerly represented the Hanlon Brothers and John Stetson's Adelphi Theatre star troupe. He has deservedly earned the reputation of a first class business man and successful advertising agent. His thorough acquaintance with the business managers of the leading journals of the country gives him unusual facilities for placing the cards of the business in which he is engaged in the most prominent positions, and thereby succeeds in attracting public attention at once. He is truly a working agent, and his success is well deserved.—Philadelphia Evening Bee, April 1st.

PERSONAL.—Mr. William H. Eveleth and Mr. C. Amory Bruce, who have been so successful in Philadelphia the past six weeks in their business, will leave the city on Wednesday next, the former for Baltimore and the latter for New York. They are both gentlemen whom it is safe and agreeable to recommend to the press and the public at large. They advertise liberally and pay promptly. Success to them, for they certainly deserve it.—Philadelphia Sunday Dispatch, April 30th.

PERSONAL.—Mr. C. Amory Bruce, the acknowledged head and front of skilful advertising agents, for many years the representative of the famous Hanlon Brothers, has been stopping the past three weeks at the St. Lawrence Hotel. Mr. Bruce knows how to excite public curiosity and create the wildest excitement, as the last three weeks' furore over his present business fully proves. He knows how to do it.—Philadelphia Sunday Mercury, April 16th.

WIDE AWAKE.—There are lots of wide-awake, early-and-late, bright, active, popular agents, but we scarcely know of one who equals, in all respects, Mr. C. Amory Bruce. For three weeks he has kept the people of this city on the qui vive. He is great at advertising, and he manages very ably. He is prompt, intelligent, judicious, capable and every inch a king in his vocation. Cheers for Bruce.—Philadelphia Evening City Item, April 7th.

WOKE THEM UP.—C. Amory Bruce, of the M. G. J. Co., has been here two or three weeks. He had hardly reached town before he blew his horn, and if ever a man woke up a town he did. Everybody is talking about him. He is the wonder of the vicinity. The man is everywhere, and he has a word for everybody. He beats all the travelers.—Philadelphia Evening City Item, April 22d.

PERSONAL.—Mr. C. Amory Bruce, the well known advertising agent, who has kept the Philadelphia public in a whirl of excitement for the past six weeks, leaves for New York city to-morrow. We part with the urbane Bruce with many regrets, and trust that his shadow may never grow dim, but increase with years.—Philadelphia Sunday Transcript, April 30th.

MR. C. AMORY BRUCE, well known in amusement circles, who has been in Philadelphia six weeks, has returned to New York. Bruce is a smart, genial and popular fellow. He says he has no assistant, no gold-headed cane, no use for kid gloves, and does not part his hair in the middle.—Philadelphia Sunday Times, April 30th.

MR. C. AMORY BRUCE, the well known advertising agent, who was last here with Stetson's Adelphi Star Troupe, from Boston, is at present stopping in our city, and has again given us a sample of his advertising abilities, which are unsurpassed in this line.—Philadelphia Sunday Republic, April 9th.

Not a little of their success is due to their gentlemanly agent, Mr. C. Amory Bruce, and in their judicious use of advertising facilities afforded by him.—Philadelphia Evening Star, April 18th.

C. AMORY BRUCE.—This energetic and well known amusement agent has issued an unique business card.—Philadelphia Evening Star, April 22d.

HELMBOLD AND CUTTER should go together—two such men would make a city; but two such men as Eveleth and Bruce would make a world.—Philadelphia Evening City Item, April 28th.

MR. C. AMORY BRUCE, the poet agent, is still in town, as brilliant as ever.—Philadelphia Evening City Item, April 27th.

C. AMORY BRUCE, Esq., is one of the best agents now in this city.—Philadelphia Evening Bee, April 14th.

G. W. JESTER,
THE MAN WITH THE TALKING HAND,
Anglo-French and funniest ventriloquist in the world, with his "Headless Men," "Little Mice," "Polish Lady," &c.
AT PITTSBURGH.—TRIMBLE'S VARIETIES.—Jester, the man whose wonderful hand takes the place of his tongue and conveys all the thoughts and emotions that actuate him, took everything and everybody by storm last night. The house was crowded to overflowing and everything connected with the entertainment went off to the delight and satisfaction of the audience.—Pittsburgh Daily Gazette, April 26th, 1871. AT CHICAGO.—HOOLEY'S.—Following the first part came "Jester, with the Talking Hand," the most expensive and meritorious ventriloquist that has ever appeared in this city.—Chicago Tribune, April 26th, 1871. Hooley's was crowded again last evening. The entire performance passed off satisfactorily. Jester outdid himself; he is one of the marvels of the age, and probably the most accomplished ventriloquist in the world.—Chicago Evening Journal, April 26th, 1871. For vacant dates—till further notice in this journal—(one prosperity May 29th or June 5th) address
